THE SITUATION AT PARIS.

Reports of Negotiations for the Surrender Still Lack Official Confirmation—Doubts on the Stock Exchange in London—Good Grounds for Believing the Reports.

LONDON, Jan. 25—Noon.—No information as to the reported visit of M. FAVRE to Versailles, has yet been authentically announced. The news is regarded on the Stock Exchange as of a doubtful character, and consols have, in consequence, fallen off a quarter since the opening.

The Echo, of today, just issued, says that no official confirmation has yet reached London of the report that negotiations for the capitulation of Paris have been commenced at Versailles. The city, however, is full of rumors of that nature.

LONDON, Jan. 25—4 P. M.—The Versailles correspondent of the Central Press Association telegraphs that there are good grounds for the belief that negotiations for the capitulation of Paris are progressing, and adds that in any event it is impossible for the city to resist the Germans beyond the early part of February.

Fearfulness of the Siege—Loss in the Recent Sorties—New German Batteries.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—An official dispatch from Versailles on the 24th says the French loss in the sortie of the 19th was 6,000 killed, wounded and missing, while that of the Germans, all told, was only 635.

New German batteries have opened fire upon the north side of Paris.

MISCELLANEOUS WAR NEWS.

Capitulation of Longwy—4,000 Prisoners and 200 Guns Captured by the Germans—The Operations in the East.

LONDON, Jan. 25—4 P. M.—Dispatches have just been received here announcing the capitulation today of the Fortress of Longwy, on the Belgian border, which has been besieged for a long time by the Germans. Four thousand prisoners of war and 200 guns fell into the hands of the victors.

A division of the German Army of the South has passed to the south of Besançon, and is threatening the rear of Gen. BOURBAKI's forces.

It appears that the Garibaldians, after their successful engagement with the German Landwehr, between Fontenx and Burgundy, tore up the rails and ties and so damaged the railroad that it is now impassable.

German Operations in the North—Co-operation With the Duke of Mecklenburg in the West.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—The Provincial Correspondenz states that military operations in the north of France will be extended in an important degree in connection with a movement of the army under the Grand Duke of MECKLENBURG.

Cincinnati Germans Protesting Against Shipments of Arms to France—Large Purchases of Grain in Prince Edward's Island for Shipment to France.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 25.—A large meeting of Germans was held to-night in Arbiter Hall, to protest against the sale and shipment of arms from the United States to the French Government. Resolutions were adopted saying that the war had been prolonged by sending arms and ammunition to France from this country; that the action of the Government was contrary to former policy; that the Germans solemnly protested, and that the Government in its policy had treated with disrespect the services of the Germans in the war for the preservation of the Union. Senator SCHURZ was complimented.

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 25.—Large quantities of grain are being purchased in Prince Edward's Island, for shipment to France.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

Jurisdiction of the Danubian Commission—An Extension to be Proposed by Austria—Reported Arrival of Jules Favre in England—Postponement to Await His Arrival—Bismarck's Note Refusing a Free Conference in Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—It is ascertained that Count APPONYI, the Austrian Minister to Great Britain, and representative of his Government in the Conference upon the Eastern question, intends to move, in the Conference, for an extension of the jurisdiction of the Danube Commission to Ibrail or Orsova. [Ibrail, Ibraïl, or Brailov, is the principal port of Wallachia, and is on the left bank of the Danube, 108 miles northeast of Bucharest. It has extensive warehouses, and the harbor is securely sheltered by a small island. The trade is chiefly conducted by Greeks. Orsova (new) is a frontier town of Little Wallachia, situated on an island in the Danube, four miles above the Iron gate, and thirty-six miles east of Moldova, on the borders of Hungary. It is a station for steam packets. Old Orsova is within the Hungarian border, a few miles south-west of the new town, and is also on the left bank of the Danube.]

LONDON, Jan. 25—4 P. M.—The Pall Mall Gazette of this afternoon is informed that M. FAVRE reached Versailles yesterday, and started for England. He is expected in London today.

The Echo prints under reserve a statement that M. FAVRE has arrived at Dover.

LONDON, Jan. 25—8 P. M.—The French Consul discredits the report that M. FAVRE has arrived in England.

The London Conference has been adjourned until the 31st inst., in consequence of the continued absence of a representative from France—one of the signatory Powers of the original treaty relating to the Eastern question. It is known that Earl GRANVILLE confers with M. TISSOT, the French Charge d'Affaires, before and after each meeting of the Conference.

A dispatch from Brussels says Count VON BISMARCK's reply to M. FAVRE, refusing him a safe conduct through the German lines of investment of Paris, is condemned by the Prussian Liberals.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Small Powers in Danger—Significant Debate in the Danish Parliament—Portuguese Finances—Bismarck Made Chancellor of the German Empire—Prince Humbert.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 23, via LONDON, Jan. 25.—The Folkething, or Lower House of the Danish Parliament, was today engaged in the consideration of the Budget. During the discussion, the leader of the Agricultural Party favored a reduction of the appropriations, on the ground that there was danger that, under the heavy burdens imposed upon their people, and from the preponderance of the Great Powers, the small States would soon disappear from the map of Europe.

The Minister of War, in supporting the Budget, expressed the belief that the condition of Europe was dangerous, and that the small Powers, however peaceably inclined, might be forced into war for the defense of their independence.

LISBON, Jan. 24, via LONDON, Jan. 25.—The Portuguese Government has submitted to the Chambers projects for new financial measures, based upon the renewal of the tobacco monopoly.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Count VON BISMARCK has been appointed Chancellor of the German Empire.

FLORENCE, Jan. 24.—Prince HUMBERT and his wife are to pass the remainder of the Winter at Rome.

Dr. Livingstone Positively Known to be Safe—Marine Disaster.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Sir RODERICK MURCHISON has received a letter from Africa giving positive intelligence of the safety of Dr. LIVINGSTONE.

The schooner Sophia, Capt. WALLIS, from New-York, for Constantinople, before reported ashore at Gallipoli, has been condemned and sold.

Public Life in America—Interesting Letter from the Late William L. Marcy.

The Washington Patriot a few days since published the following letter, addressed by the late Hon. W. L. MARCY to one of his intimate friends, on the eve of retiring from the office of Governor of this State:

ALBANY, from 31st Dec. to Jan. 1, 1839.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Before this is finished I shall have passed from public to private life, and be in a situation that I have not occupied for the last eighteen years. I should be stoical, indeed, if this transition did not call up a train of unusual thoughts. I shall not undertake to give you a full development of them; but our long and close friendship, which I flatter myself is to continue unchanged through all the changing condition of external scenes, will be my excuse, and I trust a sufficient one, for presenting you with some of my musings on that event. I take leave to assure you, of what I think you knew well enough not to doubt—that the change comes over me unaccompanied with any serious regret.

* * * Public life is in some sense a servitude, but it is usually accompanied with enjoyments, and those are to most minds a sufficient reward; but the extent of these enjoyments depends essentially upon the character of the recipient. If a public man is endowed with a good degree of vanity, he is made happy by the respect his station procures him; if he is ambitious, he is made happy by the opportunity afforded him of gratifying that dominant passion; if he is anxious to extend the sphere of his usefulness, he is made happy by the realization of his benevolent wishes. I will not say that from each of these sources I have not derived some enjoyment, but if I do not mislodge of myself, it has been less than most others would have felt in my situation. This implies an opinion that I have less vanity and less ambition than most other men. The indulgence of this opinion you may regard as a refutation of its correctness. Self-delusion more readily and more egregiously errs in disbelieving the existence of faults than over-estimating claims to merit. All the acquisitions of life are generally pronounced empty and unsatisfactory as soon as the pursuit which attended the pursuit of them have ceased.

Honest fame deserves to be prized as highly, perhaps more so, than any of them, and this usually accompanies, in a greater or less degree, a man in an elevated station, who has been faithful to his trust, even if his capacity and qualifications are of an ordinary character. How much of it I merit, or how much will be awarded to me, (for a man may get more or less than he deserves,) I will not attempt to settle, at the risk of rendering myself ridiculous, even to an intimate friend; but if, in my free unbosoming of myself to you, I felt at liberty to express an opinion on that subject, I should be at a loss to graduate it. I might say, perhaps, without arrogance or the imputation of vanity, that I have a fair claim for consideration for good intentions; or a diligent application of my faculties, whatever they are, to my public duties; for having taken, at least, usual pains to guard myself against the intrusion of improper motives of action, and to adhere to and follow out correct principles, or, rather, such as I thought to be correct.

I do not deny that I have had regard to the interests of my party, but I have pursued them as subordinate and subservient to the public good. But honesty of purpose and industry, the only points in regard to my claims for public consideration upon which I presume to venture an opinion, are but a trivial part of the materials required for the foundation of public fame—indeed, of themselves, they do nothing toward it. Good intentions, without abilities to carry them into effect, and industry, without a sound judgment to give it a proper and useful application, are of very little worth. No one can earn for himself the praiseworthy distinction which deserves the name of fame, without native talents, large acquirements, sagacity, prudence, and a sound judgment. Many claim a fair share of these, and those who think they have them in an eminent degree are the most likely to be mistaken. Of my own endowments in these respects, I shall only say that I have enough of prudence and judgment not to indulge in even a conjectural estimate of the share of them that I possess.

You may think that I am rather prematurely summing up the cause before all the facts are brought out, but I think the testimony is closed. My Spring and Summer are passed, and I have advanced far into the Autumn of life. It would be folly in me to think of sowing seed for another harvest. At most, I can only glean a little longer in the old fields. I neither see a prospect nor feel a desire of returning again to public life. Nor am I at all unhappy that it is so. Begging you to make a proper allowance for the very great difference between myself and Sir WILLIAM TEMPLE, I shall conclude my letter by borrowing the concluding paragraph of his memoirs, which was, I think, written about the same period of life to which I have arrived:

"Thus I have given my leave of all those airy visions, which have so long amused my mind, about mending the world; and, as the same time, of all those shining toys or follies that employ the thoughts of busy men, and shall turn wholly to mend myself; and, so far as consists with a private condition, still pursuing that old and excellent counsel of PYTHAGORAS, that we are, with all the cares and endeavors for our lives, to avoid disease in the body, perturbations in the mind, luxury in diet, factious in the house, and seditious in the State."

Yours truly,

W. L. MARCY.

GENERAL TELEGRAPHS.

THE RADICAL PEACE SOCIETY.

Meeting of the Massachusetts Organization—Causes of War—Might as Ignore Drafts—Petition to Repeal the War Clause in the Constitution of the United States.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—The Massachusetts Radical Peace Society held its annual Convention at Mercantile Hall, this afternoon, and organized for the ensuing year by the choice of LYSANDER L. BUGBEE for President, F. W. CLARK for Corresponding Secretary, a list of Vice-Presidents, and an Executive Committee of nine. The attendance was quite small, owing partly to the stormy weather. ALFRED H. LOVE, President of the Universal Peace Union of America, L. K. JOSLYN, and others made addresses. The regular resolutions adopted by the Convention recognize as among the primary causes of war the systematic and legalized oppression of the masses of the people, and among the first conditions of peace a more just and equitable distribution of labor and capital of the country and world; that, on the other hand, war never has been nor can be settled by the arbitrament of the sword; that the exclusion of women from politics is an efficient cause of bloodshed in the past, and that her enfranchisement would be a potent weapon in the army of the Prince of Peace, and that in view of the appalling European drama, America and England have no political or moral right to be mute spectators, but should seize the opportune moment to organize an indignant protest of the world into a supreme law of nations, to forever prevent the recurrence of international strife. A series of resolutions offered by Mr. JOSLYN, of Providence, was also adopted, which contained among other things, the following:

"That it is the inalienable right of working men to ignore drafts and the whole military system, leaving men who make war to do the fighting; that forts, arsenals and standing armies are a premium to a people, but a great danger; that training for and the occupation of a soldier should be dishonored among men; and that the Government has no right of existence that cannot exist without the killing of innocent men, women and children."

A petition to the Legislature of the State to abolish capital punishment, and another to Congress to repeal the war clause of the Constitution, were circulated for signatures.

BOSTON.

Agitation in Behalf of Female Medical Students—The Petitions of Prominent Citizens—City Hall.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Thursday, Jan. 26, 1871.

The City Government has now under consideration a petition, signed by the trustees of the New-England Female Medical College, asking that the students of that College may be allowed to visit the female wards of the City Hospital, and such other of the clinics as in the judgment of the City Council they may properly attend. The matter has been agitated for several years. In 1865 the trustees of the Medical College asked the trustees of the City Hospital for the privileges which they now demand of the City Government, but the request was denied on the ground that if allowed, the rules and arrangements of the hospital would be interfered with. Last Fall the College authorities again applied to the trustees of the Hospital for the same privileges, and it was understood that the second application was referred to the hospital surgeons and physicians, who recommended an answer to be returned similar in tenor to that which had been made five years previously. The reasons for the second refusal are not given at length, but it is understood that the opposition of the friends of the Harvard Medical College is responsible for the attitude taken by the Hospital authorities. The number of students at the Harvard Medical College is so great that the granting of the desired privileges to the students of the Female Medical College would debar a portion of the male students from access to the hospital wards. The last attempt to obtain for the female students the clinical advantages absolutely necessary for their success in the profession they have chosen, is not likely to be more successful than the others, although the petitions of the trustees of the Female Medical College, and of its students, are indorsed by such citizens as Gov. Claflin, Dr. Bowditch, Rev. Dr. Miner, Dr. Samuel, Alpheus Hardy, Gardner Brewer, William Lloyd Garrison, Gilbert Haven, Judge Russell, A. H. Rice, Josiah Quincy, Rev. W. H. H. Murray, Rev. Phillips Brooks and many others almost equally well known.

I learn that he is now sojourning with some friends in Eliott, Me.

Nitro-Glycerine Explosion—A Torpedo Factory Blown Up and a Boy Killed.

From the Titusville (Penn.) Herald, Jan. 25.

About 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, CHARLES D. PALMER, a lad of nineteen years of age, was instantly killed by an explosion at ROBERTS & Co.'s torpedo and nitro-glycerine works, on Hammond Run, upward of a mile south of this city. The youth had been employed in manufacturing nitro-glycerine for the past two months, and Mr. PENNYPACKER, who generally superintends the works, being in Philadelphia, the torpedo-filling department was left in the charge of Mr. A. S. WEST and the unfortunate youth. The spot where the accident took place is not near the glycerine factory proper, but situated about half a mile distant, on the top of the hill, and the only buildings in the immediate neighborhood were a small wooden ice box or shed, lightly built, where torpedoes were filled with fulminating compound, and another small building where they are stored after being filled, at a distance apart of about 200 feet. It appears that Mr. A. S. WEST had been up to the former building, and had filled fifteen torpedoes, and was in the act of carrying them away, having left six others for his companion to fill. He had just reached the road about two hundred yards distant, when the explosion took place. He immediately turned round and found the house blown to atoms, and CHARLEY lying horribly mangled and lifeless about twenty feet from the spot. Almost the first thing which struck the eye was the spot where the body was found. It was covered with blood and pieces of flesh, &c. Close by was one of the unfortunate lad's shoes, and, upon looking up to make a general survey, the surrounding trees were discovered to be studded with numerous shreds of his shirt and clothing, which clung to the branches and fluttered in the wind. There was no appearance of any building having been there, except twenty-four torpedo cases lying promiscuously about the snow, also a number of empty wooden boxes, which had once contained the fulminate.

The cause of the accident is supposed to have been that the unfortunate youth, after filling the torpedoes, had attempted to screw on the cap without sufficiently wiping the thread of the screw, and thus freeing it from every trace of the powder. This article goes off by slight friction, like a friction match or percussion cap, and is, of course, very dangerous to handle. There is supposed to have been about fifty pounds of powder in the shed.

Dastardly Outrage—Attempt to Throw a Train from the Track.

From the Utica Observer, Jan. 21.

Another fiendish attempt was made to wreck a passenger train on the trestle-work of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, in the western part of the city, last evening. The southward-bound train, leaving Utica at 5.35 P. M., passed over the trestle in safety. When the passenger train due in this city at 6:20 P. M. reached the switch at the eastern end of the trestle, the engine and three freight cars were thrown from the rails on to the timbers. Fortunately, the engineer was proceeding very carefully, and no serious damage was done, beyond delaying the arrival of the train at the depot until after 11 P. M. The train consisted of fourteen freight cars, a baggage and express car and passenger coach. It extended from the switch out on to the trestle, and had it been running at a greater rate of speed the coach would have been thrown into the ditch ten or fifteen feet below, and the lives of many passengers endangered. It was a fortunate escape. On examining the track, it was found that the bolt of the switch-rod had been removed, and the rail spread out and placed on the outside of the chair, with a large stone under it. This must have been done after the departure of the train for the South, but about dark.

THE SNOW-STORM.

An Old-Fashioned North-easter All Day Yesterday.

Prospect of Good Sleighing for Some Time to Come.

A Merry Time on the Road Yesterday.

Street Scenes—Casualties—Detention of Railroad Trains—Ice in the Rivers—The Ferry-boats Obstructed.

Except to the hardy and robust folks whose delight it is to "rough it," and who are disdainfully intolerant of comforters, rubbers, &c., as effeminate luxuries, there can be no question that during the season of Winter, nature is, in her milder moods, seen most pleasantly, if not to most advantage, through the medium of the parlor windows. The fortunate individuals whose occasions, or want of avocation enabled them to remain, yesterday, comfortably one conned by their pleasant hearths—the sense of comfort within intensified by the bleak and dreary aspect of nature without—were no doubt ready to exclaim, "The snow, the snow, the beautiful snow," and admire the lovely mantle of purity clothing the earth—a mantle unapproachable in its whiteness, as foam of ocean or plumage of swan. Far different, however, were the feelings of those whose fate compelled them to be abroad. The sense of the beautiful was knocked out of their souls by occasional collisions with their fellow-mortals, and they found themselves unable and unwilling to admire the snow while their eyes were blinded with it, and while its treacherous support rendered every step the possible prelude to a tumble. And tumbles were neither few nor far between. Many specimens were offered to the observer of the fall facetious—young gentleman or lady, as the case might be, elaborately gotten up, coming suddenly and ignobly down, yet heroically endeavoring to seem to regard the accident as a very good joke, for the occurrence of which they were entirely prepared. The fall facetious is not uncertaining, but in point of amusement it falls far short of the tumble truculent, which to those who have cultivated properly their sense of the ludicrous is simply side-splitting. A stout gentleman with a nose whose abnormal redness may be attributable to the cold, but in all probability has an origin far different, comes along with gait so steady and tread so firm that a "bust" seems out of the question, when suddenly there's a slip, followed by a heavy founder, and in an instant the spectacle is witnessed of a portly body sitting on a foot and a half of snow, and a voice is heard, in no gentle tones, asking some grinning imp on the sidewalk "What the devil he is laughing at?" The mention of the said imp suggests the small boys, whose enjoyment yesterday knew no bounds. To judge from the way they rolled about in the snow, gilded over its surface on sleds, and pelted it in the faces of passers-by—who for the most part took the assault good-humoredly—one would think that the snow was their natural element. The writer, upon issuing from his domicile, was encountered by a youngster in a very thin jacket and airy pantaloons, who thus accosted him: "Mister, won't you give us a ride?" And it really seemed hard to refuse the little man's request.

On the cars confusion and discontent reigned supreme. Every now and then, the shivering passengers would be requested by the bewildered conductor to get out for a moment; "just a moment, gentlemen," and when after expostulation and ejaculation almost infinite, the request was complied with, and another start achieved, a rush would take place for seats, and the vehicle would proceed in slashing style, only to come once more to a full stop, and suggest the notion that it must be drawn by the celebrated donkey who would not go. The conductors displayed the most praiseworthy energy in collecting fares, scarcely affording passengers time to shake the snow of their garments before requesting them to pay over their five-cent pieces, but it was remarkable at the subsequent stages of the up-town trip a deaf ear was turned to the expostulations of irate individuals demanding back their money, and representing that there was no possible chance of their being conveyed to their destination.

Business, in a measure, necessary to say, was almost entirely suspended. The retail stores were empty, the wholesale in no better condition, and as for the venders who sell their wares at street corners, they were nowhere to be seen. Even the newsboys were fain to seek shelter, and their shrill cry of "extra" this, that or the other failed to assail the ear of the homeward bound.

But if business was dull, and cold and discomfort prevailed, yet the law of compensation ceased not to operate, and sleighing was excellent. On Broadway, Fifth-avenue, on every thoroughfare, in fact, which afforded the requisite facilities for a ride, the exhilarating jingle of the sleigh-bells was to be heard. Naturally the Central Park was the centre and principal field for this species of enjoyment, and well was it filled yesterday with spanking teams, which were well belled, as that famous congress of mice resolved the cat should be, dragging after them silently-gliding sleighs, filled with gallant and good-humored young men and romantic and spirited young ladies, closely wrapped in furs. It was remarkable when two teams would come close to each other, and both going in the same direction, how the spirit of the race would get up in the drivers instantly, and with what eagerness, if not anxiety, they would try to jockey and beat each other. Still, no matter who won the tacitly-agreed race, the other never lost his temper, for in stormy weather people are all good nature and agreeableness, and will pass over every slight defect or discomfiture with a hearty laugh. There were some very numerous tumbles, which, especially as no person was hurt, were taken in good part and hooted upon and jested about from the ludicrous point of view. The sleighs that glided over the smooth surface of the crisp snow in the Central Park were noticeably of a better quality and better equipped than those which were to be seen on the streets and avenues. Harlem-lane, that favorite drive for the fast-goers in the Summer evenings, was well patronized in the evening and after night, mostly by business men, who were engaged in their offices and counting-houses during the day, with their wives and daughters carefully and comfortably protected from the chilly and snow-laden atmosphere by heavy furs. Gay young men, with their lady acquaintances, were also to be seen in goodly numbers, and their loud talk and ringing laughter bespoke their presence. Altogether, the scenes yesterday were enlivening and pleasant, and the amount of real pleasure enjoyed was fully equal at least to that which any other season of the year could afford an opportunity for.

The Snow-Tempest.

At an early hour in the morning the surcharged clouds showered down a new edition of the two previous days' snow volume, only this came with redoubled vigor and fierce impetuosity. The flakes were like fine crystal pellets, whirled in flurries which swept the streets and almost drew away the breath of man and beast that happened to breast the storm. From dawn until evening this continued with no perceptible abatement. After dark the pellets seemed more piercing, and, with but slight recession, continued during the night and through the early morning hours. At 6 o'clock A. M. the thermometer stood at 8° above zero; at 10 A. M., at 9°; at 12 M., at 12°; at 3 P. M., 16°; at 6 P. M., 19°; at 12 P. M., at 18°, with a downward tendency. The wind has remained northeast. The depth of snow at the time of going to press is about 24 inches.

CITY TRAVEL IMPEDED.

The various stage and car lines were greatly impeded, but by proper exertions in bringing out all their force, doubling their teams, and an extraordinary use of snow-plows, they made much better time than during the preceding storms. The Fourth-avenue route kept excellent time. The Third-avenue cars were liable to the same complaint before made of great and needless irregularity. The Sixth-avenue trains were very slightly disarranged. The Broadway line was on time with a few unavoidable exceptions. The Second, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth-avenue cars were hence irregular. At 10 P. M. the Fourth, Ninth, Tenth and Bell lines ceased their trips. The Bleecker-street route deserves any amount of credit for good arrangements over the most difficult of all the City routes.

The steam lines also did well, and there was but little room for complaint. The cross-town routes were the most difficult to manage. All the cars were exceedingly crowded, and the inconvenience of riding in mixed crowds was scarcely better than the discomfort of breasting the fierce snow-tempest on foot.

THE FERRIES.

All the ferries were in tribulation. The fierce howling winds, driving the snow in almost solid clouds, impenetrable to the eye; the rushing, angry tide, crested with huge ice-cakes, crunching and grinding in conflict; the piers and slips packed apparently from the surface level to the mud bottom, with clear, strong ice, presented barriers of no trifling moment.

At the change of tide it was next to impossible to force an entrance to any of the slips. The Thirty-fourth-street Ferry encountered small icebergs, and backing and ramming up only enabled a landing. The James-slip boats had even greater difficulty. At the Roosevelt and Catharine-street slips the situation was more favorable. Fulton, Wall, South and Atlantic slips were considerably blockaded. Heavier ice seemed to wedge the Liberty and Cortlandt-street slips, but the powerful steamers overcame all impediments. The Erie Ferry was exceedingly dilatory. The Dey-street, Hoboken, Weehawken and Hudson boats also experienced great difficulty and some delay.

THE SEA OF ICE.

A bird's-eye view of the rivers and Bay from Trinity steeple revealed an Arctic sea, broken into ridges, mounds and eddies of sparkling particles, edged with ice-bound shores and backgrounds of hills rising semi-circularly in long parallels on either side. Long Island Sound was agitated by a strong wind, which heaved the ice-fields in powerful swells up and down. As far as the eye could reach toward the dim blue outlines of the distant Connecticut shore this undulation continued, and seemed more like some artificial scenic effect than a natural action. The East River, from Governor's to Randall's Island, was a vast ice-mush, stirred about by the ferries, tugs, and other plying craft. When the tides turned the struggle of the stream around the corner of the Fulton Brooklyn slip, sent the ice-floes grating and grinding against each other. Huge barricades of glittering ice-crystals were shoved up under the frowning cannon-muzzles of Governor's Island.

From thence down the Bay, seaward, as far as the eye can reach, is a spectacle seldom seen in a life-time. The Kills between the Staten Island and New-Jersey shores are scarcely navigable even for the ferry-boats, and by these only with difficulty.

Up the Hudson River, from this City to the gate-posts of the Highlands, just above Peekskill, is a chaotic mass of miniature icebergs. At intervals, above Haverstraw, there seems to be places where an ice-bridge spans the channel, but no attempts have been made at crossing. Vast piles of cakes are upon the western bank, and tower like flashing walls of diamonds.

THE RAILROADS.

All the railroad trains have been greatly delayed. The driving snow in some cases to stopped the fires and smoke-stacks of the locomotives so to seriously embarrass progress.

The Erie seems to have been the most irregular. The mail train, due at 7:30 A. M., was ten hours behind time. The Boston trains were from two to eight hours delayed. The Hudson River and Central trains have been from four to five hours behind time. The same has been the case with the Harlem, Long Island, New-Jersey and Southern trains. Up to a late hour no advices had been received from otherwise distant points. Prominent railroad men believe that nearly all the routes between this City and the Mississippi will be blockaded, and travel temporarily suspended.

THE MAILS.

All the mails were tardy in their arrival. The Boston mail, due at 6½ P. M., did not come until 7 P. M. The other, due at 5 P. M., had not arrived at 1 A. M. The Southern mail, due at 6 P. M., arrived at midnight. The Northern, due at 4½ P. M., arrived at 7:40 P. M. The Philadelphia way, due at 5 P. M., arrived at 11 P. M. The Northern, due at 11 P. M., had not arrived.

ACCIDENTS AND INCIDENTS.

MARY BRENNAN, who lives in Seventy-fourth-street, between Third and Fourth avenues, fell yesterday on the sidewalk near her residence, and fractured her ankle. She was sent to Bellevue Hospital.

ANNIE SMITH, of No. 75 Chrystie-street, fell at the corner of Catharine and Water streets, breaking her left ankle. She was taken to Park Hospital.

MICHAEL GRIFFEN, of No. 198 South Eighth-street, Williamsburg, slipped at the corner of Roosevelt and Water streets, fracturing his right knee. He was conveyed to the Park Hospital.

The General Term of the Supreme Court was compelled to adjourn, the room being, either through some carelessness of the engineers or the inefficiency of the heating apparatus, too cold for comfort.

The Storm in Brooklyn.

In Brooklyn the cars of the different railroad lines ran at very irregular intervals, and were so overcrowded that numbers along the street who had been in waiting were unable to find sufficient space for a footing. The Atlantic and Fifth avenue lines being provided with stoves, were considered more comfortable at six cents than the City cars at five cents. They were also densely packed. With double teams on all the cars it is difficult to make way through the drifts of snow, notwithstanding the snow-plows, with six horses attached, were vigorously at work.

The Superintendents of the Poor report that the applications for relief just now are thirty per cent. greater than they were at this time last year.

The Storm on Staten Island.

The Staten Island Railroad trips were almost entirely suspended. The 5 o'clock Castleton boat from North Shore, S. I., reached the dock about one hour behind time, but the trip was, in many respects, what BURBE calls a "voyage of discovery and a circumnavigation of charity." Off Sailors' Snug Harbor one man was picked up from a flat boat wedged in the ice, after nearly three hours' exposure. Off New-Brighton, two men were also rescued from a boat in the ice, from which, with every possible effort, they could make no escape. Still further on toward the City, pilot-boat No. 22, in distress, was taken in tow.

Some anxiety is felt for the steamers Thomas Snowden and Britannia. The former left St. Michaels on the 11th of December, and has not yet been heard from. The latter left Glasgow on the 1st inst., and is some days overdue. It is very likely we shall hear of the arrival of both at Bermuda, as they have no doubt run to the southward to get clear of the heavy gales which have prevailed to the northward.

The Storm in New-Jersey.

Early yesterday morning the great snow-storm of the season commenced in New-Jersey, and imprisoned a large portion of the population in their houses during the day. Travel was seriously obstructed. On all the railroads, trains in the afternoon were from half an hour to two hours behind time. The horse-cars and ferry-boats made irregular trips at long intervals. On the Springfield-avenue line, in Newark, travel was entirely stopped. JOHN CATLIN, a pauper, was found buried in the snow at West End, and was nearly frozen to death. He was taken to the Third Precinct Police Station.

BOSTON, Jan. 26.—The cold weather continues. The thermometer this morning stood 8° below zero; at Lowell, 12° below; and at Belfast, Me., 20° below. A snow-storm commenced here at noon, and still continues.

WORCESTER, Jan. 26.—A heavy snow-storm has prevailed here all day, and is increasing.

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 26.—A heavy snow-storm prevails on the Hudson at all points, and the river is frozen over solid as far south as Sing Sing. The night trains on the Hudson River Road are running from one to two hours behind time. The cold is intense, and the wind blowing freshly from the north causes the snow to drift heavily.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 26.—A furious snow-storm commenced at 1 o'clock this morning, and continues. The snow is four inches deep. The streets are obstructed, and traveling is difficult. The snow-storm lasted until 9 P. M., and was succeeded by a heavy storm of sleet which still, at midnight, continues.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The storm, which commenced last night, continued throughout today, with intervals of cold rain.

The storm of fine, half-frozen snow has continued ever since last evening, and now (at midnight) the ground is covered with snow to the depth of five or six inches. The weather is very cold. The thermometer indicates several degrees below the freezing point.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 26.—The roof of the boiler-shed of LANE & BODLEY's factory fell in from the weight of the snow and ice at 10½ o'clock this morning, burying in the ruins Daniel Peck, who is probably

A long debate took place, in the course of which it transpired that this was the same bill which passed both Houses last session, but which failed to secure the signature of the Governor, owing to the parts which the Governor objected to modified.

Messrs. KENNEDY and PARKER insisted this bill was nothing more nor less than sectarian legislation. It was legislating upon religious belief.

Mr. WOODIN's amendment was lost—10 to 13.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and the Senate adjourned.

ASSEMBLY.

THE AVENUE C RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. FLAGG reported the Senate bill to allow the Avenue C Railroad Company to extend their track. On motion of Mr. PERRY the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole. General orders were then taken up, in Committee of the Whole, and this bill at once considered.

Adjourned.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

The following is the message of the Governor, alluded to briefly in the report above:

To the Legislature:

Intelligent and fair-minded men of all parties, agree that one of the greatest evils of the times connected with elections is the corrupt use of money to influence the votes of electors. All laws and measures which aim at establishing purity in elections will fail in their purpose if they fall short of reaching this one great evil. Registry laws, no matter how stringent, do not prove effective. No power can guard the ballot-boxes to any purpose if the men whose constitutional privilege it is to vote are to be influenced in the exercise of that privilege by the corrupt use of money. In all countries the purchase and sale of offices, civil or military, is prolific of evil. In a republic like ours the purchase and sale of voters and of votes endangers the whole organization and structure of the Government.

CORRUPTION THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

It cannot be disputed that all through the State nominations to office, Federal and State, are often bestowed upon men for the reason, and the only reason, that they will indulge in lavish expenditure of money to secure success. Money, not merit, secures nominations and controls results. It is a fact too general and too apparent to be denied, that large amounts are expended by candidates for office at every election, for other than lawful and honest election expenses; that they are directly applied to the purpose of corrupting and debauching the electors, and very often to the almost open purchase of votes. This pernicious and dangerous practice is not peculiar to cities and villages; it pervades the whole State; scarcely a neighborhood is exempt from it. It is practiced with entire impunity, because under the existing Constitution and laws the wrong-doers know very well they cannot be convicted or punished.

THE TEMPTERS MUST BE PUNISHED.

We shall never have pure elections until we strike out the root of the evil. Public opinion cannot be concentrated with sufficient force against the wrong to correct it. What is absolutely necessary is that some men, who seek their own advancement by corrupting their fellows, should be convicted and punished as criminals. It is far more important to punish those men, who tempt and corrupt, than him who, being tempted, yields and falls. Under our present Constitution, laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage persons who may be convicted of bribery, larceny, or of any infamous crime, and for depriving persons who may make wagers upon the result of any election of the right of voting at such election. And this is all that can be done under the existing provisions of the Constitution.

AMEND THE CONSTITUTION.

This, therefore, needs to be amended in this respect. Resolutions proposing amendments passed the Senate and Assembly in 1869, but failed to receive the assent of the Legislature chosen at the next election of Senators. These resolutions were as follows:

In Assembly, April 1, 1869: Resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution:

Resolved, (if the Senate concur), That section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution of this State be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the word "election," where it first occurs in said section, as follows: "Or who shall pay, give or receive, or promise to pay or give any money or other property or value, or any thing in action, with the intent to influence any elector, in giving his vote, or to deter any elector from voting, or after he shall have given his vote, to induce such elector to change his vote, or to induce any elector to withhold his vote, or induce any person to withhold his vote at such election."

Resolved, That section 1 of article 11 of the Constitution be amended by inserting therein the following, immediately after the word "years": "Nor shall any person who shall make or be concerned in making any bet or wager depending upon the result of any election, or who shall pay, give, or deposit, or agree to pay, or give money, or any security therefor, to any person with intent to influence any elector in giving his vote, or to deter any elector from voting, from the right to vote at such election, or from holding any office voted for at such election. Laws may also be passed for determining in a summary manner, at the polls, any question affecting the right of any person to vote at such election."

Resolved, by the Senate concur, That said amendments be and the same are hereby ordered to be published for three months previous to the time of next election.

THE RECOMMENDATION.

I respectfully recommend the adoption of these resolutions by the present Legislature, with such modifications, if any, as to them may seem proper, so that the next Legislature (a new Senate being chosen next November) may act upon them, and as I trust they will do, concur in them and submit them for approval to the people.

(Signed,) JOHN T. HOFFMAN.

POLITICS IN CONNECTICUT.

The Platform of the Republican State Convention.

The resolutions adopted by the Connecticut Republican State Convention in New-Haven, on Wednesday, are in full as follows:

Resolved, That we gladly renew our allegiance to the principles and policy of the Republican Party. We claim for the party and its organization a record parallel the record of its ten years of national rule. A gigantic rebellion has been suppressed; four millions of slaves set free; armies of a million raised and disbanded; the Union preserved; the Pacific railroad built; and real liberty, and equal civil and political rights, for the first time secured by constitutional amendment; the South, which had broken the connections reconstructed and restored; a million repeaters reduced, the last reduction being $80,000,000 a year; the national debt greatly reduced, from 600,000,000 of dollars to less than half that amount; the credit raised at home and abroad; the price of gold brought steadily downward; the revenues vigilantly collected and honestly disbursed; the perfect citizenship of all men secured for the first time; peace secured by settling the doctrine of expatriation; the Monroe doctrine vindicated in the case of the French invasion of Mexico; peace maintained and the national character and honor kept unsullied by the slightest stain. We know of no way of judging the future but by the past. The Republican Party has never made a pledge to liberty and union which it has not redeemed; from which it has not met and met the desperate opposition of the Democratic Party.

Resolved, That the Republican Party can be trusted in the future, as in the past, to deal wisely and boldly with the finance, taxation, and currency, in accordance with the wishes of the great majority of various Conventions, that they favor measures such, if adopted, to result in repudiation and bankruptcy, the return of paper and legislation seeking retrogression of specie payment, the speedy establishment of a sound currency, and a tariff sufficient for revenue, carefully adjusted to the tax payers of all classes, and discriminating and encouraging the great industrial interests of this country.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Government to enforce the strictest economy in all its expenditures; and to revise all appropriations, direct or indirect, which may be solicited in aid of private schemes and enterprises.

Resolved, That the Republican majority in Congress, by its courage in confronting and its energy in handling the difficulties and perils which it has encountered, and by the wisdom and thoroughness of its measures wherever it has thus far disposed of these questions, has deserved well of the Republic.

Resolved, That President GRANT, by his integrity, his patriotism, his firmness and vigor of action, his unwavering fidelity to the principles of the Republican party, his just deference to the opinions of Congress and of the people, and by his firmness in the discharge of his high duties, has earned the confidence of the nation; that under his administration we may be assured that as far as he can accomplish such a result, the Ship of State will be faithfully executed at home, the honor of the Republic fully maintained abroad; and that we especially approve the calm and temperate spirit in which he has made manifest his determination to secure a settlement of the Alabama question and the fishery question in such a manner as to maintain peace and exact justice at the same time.

Resolved, That we shall heartily approve such a reform in the civil service of the country as shall fill the subordinate departments of the Government as may be most likely to secure competent and faithful officers in every branch of the Administration.

Resolved, That the legislature of this State, for the past fifteen years, is honorable to the Republican Party, in whose hands it has steadily been. The war was energetically sustained, and in peace the taxes have been annually reduced, large payments annually made towards the State debt, the demands of educational and humane institutions liberally met, and the character of the State in all respects sustained.

Resolved, That the statistics of this commonwealth show that intemperance, violence and crime are alarmingly on the increase, therefore

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Legislature, as the guardians of the public weal, seriously to inquire whether further legislation may be necessary to give efficacy to existing laws, so that the peace, security and health of the community may be protected.

Resolved, That general education is essential alike to the security and perpetuity of our institutions; that the source of thrift in peace and power in war, the cheapest defense of the nation, the wisest police against seeking the prevention rather than the punishment of crime; that the wealth of the State consists in its men—in its measure of mind; that education leads to economy, thrift and virtue, while ignorance means waste and weakness, if not perpetuates vice and crime; that it is the duty and interest of the State to secure a good common-school education free to the children of all classes, the poor as well as the rich; that we commend the growing harmony and co-operation between labor and capital, and the recent liberality and the interest of our manufacturers and capitalists in promoting the education of the children of the State, and congratulate the people on the encouraging progress of this great interest.

Resolved, That we pledge to the gentlemen whom we have this day nominated our hearty support; and we confidently commend them as worthy to receive the suffrages of the freemen of this State.

Tweed's New Scheme.

From the Troy Times, Jan. 25.

The World is any thing but enthusiastic over TWEED'S Tax Levy bill. It has to advocate it; "a bargain's a bargain." But it performs its task in a very ungracious and even sulky way. The expense of bribing the Tax Levy through the Legislature will be saved, it says; and that is one comfort. (Who did the bribing?) Then it is sure that no New-Yorker, "not a novice in municipal affairs," would think it "wise" to leave the adjustment of the taxes to the Common Council. (This remark will be perfectly intelligible to Troy tax-payers. They know how it is themselves.) The World admits that the modest proposition of Mr. TWEED to lodge in himself and his friends, SWEENY, CONNOLLY and HALL, the tremendous power of regulating taxation, is against reason and analogy. * * * There is something touched on in this World article which does concern every property-holder in the State; which ought to command the attention of every honest man. We know to our cost that the taxes are ruinously heavy, thanks to the dishonesty or extravagance of those who profess to represent the people. They are slowly but surely checking the growth and grinding the prosperity of our cities. Troy is not a poor town, but if it were much richer than it is, it could not bear its permanently under the present taxation. Now what is to be done? Is it true that there is nothing which can be done? Are we of the "rural districts" powerless to check extravagance and prevent this wholesale spoliation? We do not believe it. The honest people of this State are in the majority. From the nature of the case the plundered must always outnumber the plunderers. All that is needed is for these honest people, who believe in economical government, to perceive the danger in which they stand and the way out of it. That way is to let partisanship slide and to unite, here in Troy and everywhere else, in putting the right sort of men into office. Until they get ready to do this there is no salvation for them; the incompetents and corruptionists will continue to squander the public money, and the taxes will become yearly more burdensome. Are they not heavy enough already?

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 12, 1871.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate a communication from RICHARD DELAFIELD, tendering his resignation as one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institute, to take effect Feb. 1. Read and laid on the table.

A communication from the Board of Trustees of the Columbia Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb was read, inviting the attendance of the Senate on the occasion of the exercises of the institution on Sunday next, to be presided over by the President of the United States.

AN EXPLANATION.

Mr. ROBERTSON, of South Carolina, explained that in his recent statement relative to the retention under pay of a clerk of the Post-office Department who did no work, he was in error in saying he complained to the head of that Department. His complaint was made to the head of the bureau in which the clerk was engaged.

PETITIONS.

Petitions were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. RAMSEY, of Minnesota—From the stockholders of the United States and Brazil Steam-ship Company, for an additional subsidy for carrying the mails. Referred to the Committee on Post-offices.

By Mr. STOCKTON, of New-Jersey—From all the insurance companies of New-Jersey, City of N. J., asking that this city may be made a port of entry. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GOLA, of California—From the envelope manufacturers and stationers of San Francisco, protesting against the practice of the Government in the selling of stamped envelopes and mailing them free, and interfering, with their business. Laid on the table, the subject being discussed.

Mr. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania—From capitalists, asking to be incorporated as the American and European Telegraph Company. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following new bills were introduced:

By Mr. YATES, of Illinois—Extending the jurisdiction of the Courts of Illinois. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont—To expedite the administration of justice. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POMEROY, of Kansas—To enable the Indian bands of the Swan Creeks of Black River, Chippewas and the Chenos Indians of Kansas, to dispose of their lands.

BILLS REPORTED.

The following bills were reported from the various Committees:

By Mr. VICKERS, of Maryland, from the Committee on Commerce—The House joint resolution for the protection and preservation of the food fishes of the coast of the United States.

By Mr. SPEARS, of Alabama, from the same Committee—A bill providing for the administration of oaths by Collectors of Customs, and Surveyors acting as Collectors.

Also, the House joint resolution exempting canal boats from the payment of marine hospital dues and for other purposes.

By Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary—The bill transferring to the Attorney-General all powers relating to the disbursement or discharge of convicted offenders against the laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

By Mr. CHANDLER, of Michigan, from the Committee on Commerce—A bill making a temporary appropriation of $100,000 for the prosecution of the work on the Saint Mary's River in Michigan, and for other purposes.

By Mr. RAMSEY, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Post-offices—A bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Boonville.

By Mr. POOLE, of North Carolina—A bill to place a portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation to the Kansas Agricultural and Mechanical Association for a fair-ground was passed.

THE PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate then took up and passed the Pension Appropriation bill. The only amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to the bill as it passed the House was the following paragraph:

"For the ratable increase of pensions above the rates authorized by law, provided for in an act of the present session, entitled "An act increasing the pensions of disabled soldiers, and of the widows and children of deceased soldiers and sailors," $5,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill now goes to the President.

CLAIM OF A POSTMASTER.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, called up the House bill to reimburse ROBERT BENGHAM, late Postmaster at Franklin, Penn., for the loss by the failure of the Venango National Bank, of Franklin, of $2,600 of public funds deposited there by that officer.

Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, objected to the bill as establishing a dangerous precedent. Upon his request the report of the House Committee on the subject was read, which it appeared that the Committee, which had accepted that of the House—was read, showing that Mr. BENGHAM had authority from the Department to deposit the money, but with the understanding that it was at his own risk.

Mr. CAMERON explained and advocated the measure, pending which the Senate, at 1:40 o'clock, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. HOOPER presented a communication from Mr. FERGUSON, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, relating to the income tax, which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. FERGUSON in this communication says:

I regard the tax as the one of all others most objectionable to the genius of our people, being inquisitorial in its nature, and dragging into public view an exposition of the most private pecuniary affairs of the citizen; yet it is a revenue tax, and can be most conveniently collected through the maintenance of the most expensive machinery, and both the nature of the tax and the means necessarily employed for its enforcement appear to be regarded by the great mass of citizens with more and more tolerance from year to year. It is, furthermore, most difficult of exact statement, especially in large business transactions, and where long periods of time are involved in extended commercial affairs. There is some question as to its constitutionality, but as to that I express no opinion. The amount derived from that source has been greatly diminished, and I am so well satisfied that the evils more than counterbalance the benefits derived from its longer retention, that I recommend its repeal. I refer to a later communication from the Commissioner, dated the 9th of January, to estimate the loss of revenue from the increase of the exemption from $1,000 to $2,000, as $3,182,161, which, added to the loss by reducing the revenue under the five per cent. rate, and but $6,852,784 as the aggregate revenue that would be derived under the two and a half per cent. rate, and the exemption of all dividends, whether from profits of banks, railroad companies, &c., under the reduced rate, he estimates at $4,285,248, which, added to the $6,852,784, would give in round numbers $11,000,000, as the revenue from the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the act of the 14th of July, 1870, based on the average returns of the last four years. He expresses the opinion, however, that in consequence of the general depreciation of the premiums and the high price of the paper currency and other causes the actual receipts for the coming year would fall considerably short of that estimate, and he renews his recommendation for the entire abolition of the income tax.

INCREASED REPRESENTATION.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, of Iowa, introduced a bill allowing additional representation in the Forty-third Congress, as follows:

New-York, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Texas, Wisconsin and Kansas, two each; Missouri, Michigan and Iowa, three each; Massachusetts, New-York, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, California and Minnesota, one each; and Illinois, four; such additional members to be elected by general ticket.

Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

HOMESTEADS FOR SOLDIERS.

The House then took up the bill reported on Tuesday last from the Committee on Military Affairs, to enable honorably-discharged soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphan children, to acquire homesteads on the public lands. The fourth section of the bill authorizes the transfer by duly perfected of his rights, privileges and benefits as homestead settler, to an agent or attorney.

The bill was opposed by Messrs. JULIAN, of Indiana, VAN WYCK, of New-York, and other members as being one that would be of little advantage to the pensioner, but would be of benefit only to land speculators, who would buy up at cheap rates the pensioner's claim; and as was the case with the old bounty land-warrants.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, spoke in advocacy of his substitute proposing to extend to the soldiers of the late war the provisions of the Bounty Land act of 28th September, 1850.

The morning hour expired, and the bill went over till Tuesday next.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. ARNELL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a bill for the better security of Agricultural College funds.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amount of agricultural land scrip issued to each state, and the disposition made thereof, and to make report thereon to Congress at the commencement of each regular session, and forbids any change in the investment of the funds to be made without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

After explanation by Mr. ARNELL the bill was passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The House then, at 1:40, went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. WHEELER in the chair, and resumed consideration of the Indian Appropriation bill. The question which had been debated so much the last two sessions, as to the policy of making treaties with Indian tribes, and as to the right of the Senate by such treaties, to bind the House to make appropriations to fulfill them, was discussed at much length. Without disposing of the bill, but having reached the last paragraph, the Committee rose at 4 o'clock.

REAPPORTIONMENT.

Mr. LOGAN, of Illinois, presented the resolutions of the Illinois Legislature in favor of a reapportionment of representation in Congress, to apply to the Forty-second Congress; and for the improvement of the Wabash River.

THE LATE SENATOR NORTON.

The death of Senator NORTON, of Minnesota, was announced, when eulogies were pronounced on the life and character of the deceased by Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, and Messrs. WILKINSON and MORGAN; after which the House adjourned.

Foreigners and Mexican Citizenship.

A correspondent writing from Acapulco to the San Francisco Bulletin, under date of Jan. 6, says: "We hear from the capital that the Government has finally published the principles in regard to foreigners and Mexican citizenship: The sons of foreigners established in Mexico preserve their nationality forever, if born in a foreign country, and up to the time they become of age if born in the Republic. The former must consequently get naturalized to become Mexican citizens, and the latter must declare their intention of nationality within one year after arriving at maturity. Up to the present date, foreigners have always enjoyed greater immunities than the native-born Mexicans. They were exempt from many taxes, from military services, &c.; but the Mexicans having ceased to be afraid of European navies, Government has commenced to disregard all considerations, and in some instances has despoiled foreigners at its pleasure."

TO FLORIDA IN WINTER.

Comforts and Discomforts of the Trip. Wretched Railroad Arrangements and Accommodations—Sound Advice to Invalid Tourists—The Scenery Along the Route—At Waverley.

From a Special Correspondent.

PALATKA, Fla., Saturday, Jan. 7, 1871.

"A trip to Florida!" What a grateful and comfortable suggestion! How the fancy seizes upon the idea, and expands and dilates in the act! We have a picture in which warm and sunshine, blue skies and bright waters, gay birds and odorous flowers intermingle, in the arrangement and harmonious contrast. If you happen to receive such an inspiration while facing the sharp blast of a northern sky, while plunging through the slush of a New-York [illegible] to look out on a [illegible] Florida, [illegible] comes and disappears. Five-sixths of the [illegible] happen to you, reader, as it did to your correspondent ten days ago—you may at the first convenient chance deposit all the stray greenbacks in your pocket-book with some urbane ticket agent, and, carpet-bag in hand, mount the first train that leads for the "Sunny South."

THE PICTURE AND THE REALITY.

But even when (as I did) you make Washington the initial point of your journey, you soon find that a trip to Florida is not all your fancy painted. Whatever be the case with the Southern people, it is very clear that Southern railroads are still painfully in need of "reconstruction." The job printer has done all that mortal could do to make Southern travel agreeable. The urbane ticket-seller, in his cozy office, in surrounded by brilliant placards, framed in gilt and carving that would do honor to a Titian canvas, which are very pictures of silver to the eager, shivering candidate for tropical sojourn. Staring capitals in Sepia, vermilion or ultramarine, give such comforting assurances of speed and safety, of direct routes and through trains, of luxurious cars by day and sleeping palaces by night, as would almost tempt one to start for the moon or Elysian Come. It is a blessed dispensation that a man parts with those illusions gradually. Mine began having me very promptly. "A ticket to Florida." I said, to the urbane ticket-man. "We sell tickets only to Richmond," replied that affable individual. "But you told me last week you sold through tickets," I responded. "We have received orders since to stop selling," was the rejoinder, and the argument was closed without appeal. It was not very difficult to divine the reason. The Potomac had frozen up, disabling a rival route, and the shrewd directors determined to profit by this monopoly, however short and fleeting it might be. What was the public convenience to them in comparison with the difference between "local fare" and "through rates?" But I must epitomize my chapter of annoyances. How I rose an hour before day, on a cold Winter morning, to take the only train; how I was delayed twelve hours at Richmond, only to be forced to make another start four hours before day; how the stupid ticket-man at this former core of the Confederacy, sold me a ticket by sea, when I protested over and over again that I could and would only go by land—how the only sleeping-car I encountered had a "hot axle" that filled it with the stifling smoke of the burning grease, until in my agony I dreamed as Gomon was holding me over the crater of Vesuvius, to suffocate me with its sulphurous fumes. And how on the final home-stretch from Savannah to Jacksonville, lasting from 4 to 10 the afternoon to 6 next morning, a route over which the beguiling pleasant had promised the most magnificent sleeping-coaches, we found only a dirty, puny, narrow-seated, antediluvian, revamped second-class passenger car, made to do first-class duty, stuffed to suffocation, in which we passed the long, cheerless night in impatient vigils—how the unreliable contraband who tended our stove always let one fire go out before making another—how we wore away the tedious hours, watching the white frost glittering in the bright moonlight, wondering why Florida express trains stop to load sleepers, or carrying the groups of freedmen, who, frozen out of their scanty supply of bed-clothing, sat huddled in groups around the impromptu bonfires they had built before their rickety cabins by the roadside—all these were incidents full of vivid details to myself and my fellow-victims, but which I cannot well convey to the distant reader.

WHAT TOURISTS SHOULD BY NO MEANS DO.

And this brings me to the point for which I mention them, and which is by no means for the purpose of advertising the railroads. The ordinary robust tourist, whether he be a commercial traveler from New-York, bent on selling invoices of plantation brogans to unreconstructed retailers, or whether she be one of those intellectual Sameons in New-England petticoats, who cannot go peacefully to her grave without having plucked an orange-bud in Mrs. Browne's garden, can well enough endure these privations, with but slight tax on either patience or health. But there is, alas! a large and growing class of invalids to whom a trip South is the last throw in their stubborn and desperate game with death, and to whom worriment, fatigue, bad air, and sudden, chilling draughts are almost as fatal as poison or the knife would be. I do not plead in their behalf with the railroad corporations, who, having no souls, are not amenable either to the powers of earth or heaven. But the newspaper is the natural antidote to the red-blue-gilt railroad placard, and it is the proper privilege of the public journal to inform the health-seeker what he may expect to encounter. I wish, therefore, though the TIMES to repeat the often-urged warning to invalids not to start South until they have made all possible provision against the privations of the journey, and especially to bring warm Winter clothing and a superabundance of wrappings with them. For it must not be forgotten that to us Northerners Florida is a far-off land. You can go from Chicago to San Francisco, or from New-York to Paris, if not as quickly, almost as easily, as to come from either place here.

TIME MADE FROM DIFFERENT POINTS.

It may interest the reader, if I subjoin in this connection, a memorandum of the time made by the trains between principal points: From New-York to Washington, twelve hours; from Washington to Richmond, nine hours; from Richmond to Wilmington, fifteen hours; from Wilmington to Charleston, twelve hours; from Charleston to Savannah, eight hours, and from Savannah to Jacksonville, fourteen hours—a total of seventy hours' running time—to which if we add twelve hours' delay at Richmond under existing arrangements, and other voluntary or forced stoppages, it becomes rather a formidable pleasure excursion.

THE SCENERY ALONG THE ROUTE.

The trip does not afford any great variety or novelty of scenery, except, of course, the ordinary changes of the external features that diversify distant points in all countries. The railroad is a great cosmopolitan that triumphs over climate, locality, custom and race. Still, it spreads itself so slowly over Southern soil that it has not obliterated the differences that exist on either side of Mason and Dixon's Line. As the train whirls you past the red hills of the Old Dominion, you involuntarily draw a comparison between the snug, unpretending farmers' home that you left up North and the ostentatious homestead mansions that stand here and there on commanding elevations in their pointless poverty, surrounded by their groups and trains of dissipated negro quarters in tenantless solitude. They give you at once the key to the present condition of the South—the domineering proprietor gone, the slavish tenantry scattered, and the independent, self-laboring, self-sustaining citizen and owner not yet come. You note painfully the absence, about these railroad stations, of that life and bustle, the fresh chips and new lumber, the enterprise and improvement that everywhere mark the advent of the iron horse on the Western prairies, and find their only substitute in the horde of tattered freedmen who invade the cars, driving a languishing and doleful traffic in boiled eggs and doubtful pies. Strangely enough, there are some encouraging signs when you get further south, into the land of tar and turpentine. Here you do occasionally see a cabin of unchinked logs, or the gleam of freshly split

THE HIDEOUS VICE.

Close of the Trial of Dr. Wolff for Abortion.

The Prisoner Convicted—He Is Sent to State Prison for Seven Years by Judge Boilet.

The final proceedings in the trial of Dr. MICHAEL A. A. WOLFF, for abortion, took place in the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, before Judge BOSWORTH. The case, which commenced on Tuesday, was brought to a close with commendable dispatch. As the end approached the interest in it became stronger, and was manifested in the eager and absorbed attention which was given by the numerous spectators present to the slightest movement or remark for or against the prisoner. Four cases the closer of Judge BOSWORTH, which contained favorable comment on account of its fairness and cogency. Then followed the conviction of WOLFF by the jury, and the trial was finally completed by the prompt rendering of the much-merited sentence by Judge BOSWORTH. The verdict and the sentence caused a lively feeling of gratification on account of the terrible vocation which they gave to professional abortionists, whose hideous vice, which is nothing less than auto-natal murder, has hitherto escaped punishment. They have openly carried on their infamous practice in this City to a degraded extent, and have laughed at the defect of responsible officers who have vainly attempted to prosecute them. Yesterday's proceedings commenced with a charge by Judge BOSWORTH, which was as follows:

JUDGE BOSWORTH'S CHARGE.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: The prisoner at the bar, MICHAEL A. A. WOLFF, is charged with the crime of manslaughter in the second degree. The statute under which the District-Attorney has chosen to indict, reads as follows:

"Any person who shall administer to any woman with child, or who shall for any such woman or advise or procure her to take any medicine, drug, substance, or thing whatsoever, or shall use or employ any instrument or other means whatever, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of such woman, unless the same shall have been necessary to preserve her life, shall, in case the death of such child or of such woman be not thereby produced, be deemed guilty of manslaughter in the second degree."

Before you can render a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the second degree against the prisoner, the District-Attorney has fully established the following:

First—That the deceased, on or before the 4th day of June, (the day on which the prisoner paid his first visit,) was a woman "with child."

Second—That the prisoner did administer to the deceased, or cause her to take some drug or medicine, or employ any instrument or other means whatever, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of deceased, and that said treatment was not necessary to preserve her life.

Third—That by reason of such treatment a miscarriage was produced.

Fourth—That the miscarriage thus produced caused death.

Keep these four facts constantly in your mind. I ask you to follow me for a moment in I direct your attention to the main facts of the case.

The first witness in behalf of the people, sworn as to the identity of the deceased, said, deceased had her a visit on the 4th of May, and had visited him last until the 4th day of June, when she died. Late in evening, at the request of the deceased, he had called on the prisoner. That, at about 10 o'clock in the evening of the 4th day of June, the prisoner visited the deceased at her residence. When he left, there was no light in the room; very little which might possibly be reflected from the street lamp. Shortly after the departure of the prisoner, therefore, there was a light. The witness then left the room. Prisoner remained alone with the deceased for about five minutes, and then left. The next day, the witness found the deceased in a dying condition in the morning. He was again alone with the deceased, remained for a few minutes, and left. About noon, witness left the deceased, and returned in an awful state in the bedroom. The Medical Examiner opened the bed, and found the deceased covered with blood, and a quantity of the bed was saturated with blood of a whitish color, as if blood were mixed with other matter. The witness and other witnesses testified that the witness and other witnesses were the matter with deceased, and also if the deceased had told him, three weeks ago, that she was in an awful way; that he gave her Indian rubber, to take any cool care of her, or not, for fear that

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

Up to noon on the 25th no authoritative information of the presence of M. FAVRE at Versailles to negotiate the surrender of Paris was received in London. The news from Paris had produced a buoyant effect on the Stock Exchange in London at the opening, but toward 1 P. M. a reaction occurred, as doubts of the correctness of the news gained strength.

A Versailles official dispatch says the French lost 6,000 in the recent sortie, and the Germans only 650. New German batteries have been opened on the north side of Paris. The capitulation of Longwy is announced. Four thousand prisoners of war and 200 guns fell into the hands of the Germans. The rear of BOURBAKI's forces is threatened by a German force, which passed to the south of Besançon. The Garibaldians, after their success over the Germans at Dijon, tore up the railroad between Pontoux and Burgundy.

The Germans of Cincinnati held a meeting on Wednesday night to protest against the sale and shipment of arms from the United States to the French Government. The resolutions set forth that the war is prolonged by this aid, and that the Government, in this new policy, disregards the services of the Germans in the war against the rebellion. Large purchases of grain have been made in Prince Edward's Island for shipment to France.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The Austrian representative in the London Conference intends to move for an extension of the jurisdiction of the Danube Commission over the towns of Ibrail or Ozsova. The previously-announced adjournment to Jan. 31, to await the arrival of a representative from France, is confirmed. Various rumors prevailed on Wednesday in London regarding M. FAVRE, who was reported to have reached England on the 20th. The report was doubted by the French Consul at London. It is said that Earl GRANVILLE consults with M. TISSOT, the French Chargé d'Affaires, before and after each meeting of the Conference. Count BISMARCK's note, refusing a safe conduct to M. FAVRE, is said to be condemned by the German Liberals.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

In the debate on the Budget in the Danish Lower House, on the 23d, a reduction was urged on the ground of the danger that, under the heavy burdens imposed, and from the preponderance of the Great Powers, the small States might disappear from the map of Europe. The Minister of War supported the appropriations with the argument that the condition of Europe was dangerous, and the small Powers, however peaceably inclined, might be forced into war to maintain their independence....New financial measures based on the revival of the tobacco monopoly, have been laid before the Portuguese Chambers.... Count BISMARCK has been appointed Chancellor of the German Empire....Sir RODERICK MURCHISON has received a letter from Africa giving positive assurance of the safety of Dr. LIVINGSTONE.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, the resignation of RICHARD DELAFIELD, as Regent of the Smithsonian Institute, was received. Several petitions were presented, two of which were for subsidies to steam-ship lines, and one that Jersey City be made a port of entry. Two or three new bills were introduced, and several were reported from committees. None of these were of primary importance. The Pension Appropriation bill was passed. The claim of a postmaster on account of the failure of a bank in which he had deposited public funds was rejected. The question of repealing the income tax was then taken up, and after some debate, in which Messrs. COLE of California, JOHNSTON of Virginia, and others, favored the repeal, and HOWELL of Iowa, CRAGIN of New-Hampshire, and others, opposed it, the bill was passed by a vote of 36 to 8.

In the House, a communication was received from Commissioner PLEASONTON in relation to the income tax, in which he expresses the belief that the evils more than counterbalance the benefit derived from its retention, and recommends its unconditional repeal. A bill allowing additional representation in the Forty-third Congress, was introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee. The bill allowing soldiers and sailors to acquire homesteads, was taken up and discussed, but finally went over till Tuesday next. A bill for the better security of Agricultural College funds was reported and passed. The Indian Appropriation bill was then further considered in Committee of the Whole, but not disposed of. The proceedings closed with an appropriate notice of the decease of Senator MORRON, of Minnesota.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, a bill was introduced providing for the election of a Supervisor-at-Large in Kings County, who shall be ex-officio President of the Board, have a casting vote, and hold office two years at a salary of $6,000. Another was introduced to amend the charter of the Hudson River and Harlem Canal Company by extending the time of organization. Notice was given of a bill to punish the practice of abortion and like offenses. The bill for the completion of the Court-house in the Ninth District of New-York was passed. The resolution to adjourn finally on the 21st of February was amended by fixing the adjournment at the expiration of the hundred days, and this passed. A resolution was offered and laid over to amend the Constitution so as to permit the appointment of a Board of Prison Managers, as recommended by the Prison Association. The bill for the protection of minors was discussed, when it was shown that it was the bill which passed both branches last year, modified in accordance with the objections made to it by the Governor. A Message from the Governor on the use of money at elections was sent to the Senate, accompanied by the resolutions passed in both branches of the Legislature in 1869, proposing amendments to the Constitution on this subject, which the Governor recommends the adoption of. The Senate then adjourned. In the Assembly the Avenue C Railroad Extension bill was ordered to a third reading. The Governor's Message was also sent to the House. The appropriation for the Antietam Monument was passed. Among the bills was one to establish a board for the examination of Clerks of Courts in New-York. The House adjourned.

GENERAL.

The snow storm in Philadelphia began yesterday morning at 1 o'clock, and continued through the day. Snow ceased falling in Cincinnati at 8 A. M., yesterday. In St. Louis four inches of snow fell on Wednesday night, and rain fell all day yesterday. At 2 P. M. yesterday it was snowing in Boston, Hartford, Philadelphia, Washington, Albany, Rochester, Montreal and Toronto, and was raining or sleeting as far south as Augusta, Ga., and west to Chicago. The storm prevailed yesterday all along the Hudson River, and trains on the railroad were running one to two hours behind time. Snow began to fall on the summit of Mount Washington at 2 P. M. yesterday.

The Working Men's Convention in Albany had under consideration, yesterday, a bill to be submitted to the Legislature, to abolish the contract system of labor in the State Prisons; one to prohibit the employment of minors under fourteen years in factories, and another providing for a bureau of labor statistics, to be located at Albany.

The contest for the seat of Col. L. D. CAMPBELL in Congress, from the Third Ohio District, has been discontinued, on account of the appointment of Gen. SCHENCK to a foreign mission, and of the justice to be done the disfranchised soldiers in the Dayton Asylum, through restoration to the jurisdiction of the State.

A shed connected with boiler-works in Cincinnati was crushed in by the weight of snow on the roof, and seven men buried beneath it. One was fatally injured and the others suffered more or less.

Gov. Hoffman on Electoral Purity.

Gov. HOFFMAN has discovered that republican institutions are in jeopardy. He sees that the ballot-box is corrupted with impunity, and that improper influences are making elections a mockery and a farce. He declares that "in a republic like ours, the purchase and sale of voters and of votes endangers the whole organization and structure of the Government." He asserts, too, that "what is absolutely necessary is, that some men who seek their own advancement by corrupting their fellows, should be convicted and punished as criminals."

We state literally some of the more striking points of a Message yesterday sent by the Governor to the Senate. The immediate purpose of the document is to suggest the adoption of resolutions proposing amendments to the State Constitution, making criminal the giving or receiving of money or any other valuable consideration as a means of controlling votes. As matters now stand, the Governor says, electors are openly and systematically debauched; ability to spend money is often a qualification sought in the nomination of candidates; and the whole State is demoralized in consequence. He would, therefore, have the present Legislature take the initiative step toward arresting "one of the greatest evils of the time connected with elections"—"the corrupt use of money to influence the votes of electors."

All this is true. Elections hereabout have ceased to be honest expressions of public opinion. They are controlled by corrupt and demoralizing agencies. And if our republican form of government is not to become an object of scorn among the nations, the evil must be stopped, and the men responsible for it punished as common criminals. In thus presenting one phase of a very large question, Gov. HOFFMAN expresses views which have been reiterated for years in the columns of the TIMES. The fault we find in his Message is the failure to state obvious and notorious facts connected with this subject of corruption in elections. There is, indeed, a certain audacity in an exposure of electoral fraud and robbery by one who owes his election, and his re-election, to the Governor's chair to the most shameless perversion of the ballot-box. But if Gov. HOFFMAN deemed it necessary to touch the subject at all, he was bound to make the arraignment complete. It is not enough that he dilates on "one of the greatest evils of the time." Mere generalities signify little. He should have pointed the moral of his tale by indicting Tammany as the great corrupting power of this State, and by separating himself from the band of usurpers who, by systematic and wholesale fraud and bribery, regulate elections according to their sovereign pleasure.

It is idle to bewail electoral impurity while the great source of impurity remains unnoticed. Bribery is undoubtedly resorted to by individuals here and there, in all parts of the State, and whatever the Legislature can do to prevent it and to punish both briber and bribed, should be done. But individual corruption is trivial, because comparatively rare. The giant evil is the organized corruption practiced by Gov. HOFFMAN's friends in this City, through channels and by methods which the constitutional amendment he suggests would not reach. The Tammany Ring have reduced fraud and corruption in the management of elections to a science. They do not waste time or strength in negotiating for a vote: they manufacture voters and votes by the thousand. They do not trouble themselves with the lawful vote of Smith or Jones: they muster regiments of Smiths and Joneses, who are not entitled to vote, but who do vote under the protection of Tammany and its Judges. They are not embarrassed by the existence of a lawful majority against them; they stuff the ballot-boxes and cheat opponents in the counting. Gov. HOFFMAN knows this as well as any man. He has profited by it—not exactly as TWEED and SWEENY and some of his own relatives have profited, but to an extent quite as marked, and to himself, perhaps, quite as satisfactory. His present position is the result of Tammany's manipulation of ballot-boxes, and his political hopes rest upon the continuance of Tammany's ability to control the votes and the Treasury of this City. Read in the light of his own history, and with a knowledge of his personal and party associations, his Message is very shallow hypocrisy. For "the whole organization and structure of the government" are endangered most of all by the power which made him what he is, and keeps him where he is. And the "men who seek their own advancement by corrupting their fellows," and should therefore "be convicted and punished as criminals," are his own bosom friends, and masters of the Legislature whose interposition he invokes.

The hollowness of the Message is made yet more apparent by Gov. HOFFMAN's hostility to the only useful methods of promoting honest elections which we now possess. His party adherents contemplate the repeal of the Registry law, and he now openly decries it as ineffective. But why not effective? Simply Because the men who, instead of being in Sing Sing, occupy places of power and profit in this City, tamper with the registry lists, place upon them fraudulent voters, and impair their efficacy by frauds at the polls and in the counting. The hostility of the Democracy to the Registration law is the best proof of its value. So also in regard to the Federal Election law. Its sole purpose is to secure purity in elections; its tendency is to secure the punishment of those whom Gov. HOFFMAN pretends to assail as enemies of republican institutions. Yet the Governor and his Tammany associates hate this law more than they hate "the greatest evils of the time," and denounce it with a bitterness compared with which this condemnation of bribery and corruption is tame indeed. We should have more respect for the Governor and his Message if the professions he makes were not falsified by his acts and by the record of the Ring whose orders he obeys.

The Herald Heads Peter Cooper a Lawsuit.

Although that truly wonderful man, Mr. PETER COOPER, has been induced to sign a memorial in the name of the Citizens' Association, in behalf of TWEED's new Tax Levy scheme, it is some satisfaction to find that even the journals which supported TWEED during the elections are afraid to indorse his latest device for plundering the public. This fact alone ought to bring Mr. PETER COOPER to his senses, if anything could. He, like Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS and other men whose foolish conduct has been exposed, probably shelters himself behind the plea that "he always acts for the best." But here is a scheme which is palpably designed on the face of it to fill the pockets of the Ring at the expense of the public, to consolidate its power, and deprive the people of the very forms of constitutional government. The Democratic papers scarcely dare to summon up courage enough to praise it. Republicans everywhere earnestly protest against it. Mr. PETER COOPER alone is bold enough to recommend it to the people—and he does so simply because, to be plain, he appears to have surrendered his wits into the hands of Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS, one of the most crafty and unscrupulous of all the paid agents of Tammany, however much he may boast of having "the President on his side." If President GRANT really did give much encouragement to men like SANDS, honest and faithful members of the party would have little ground for hope.

The Citizens' Association is now to bear the humiliation of being lectured by the Herald on its breach of faith in recommending TWEED's new scheme to the public. The Herald is one of the most efficient of all the supporters of the men who so shamefully misgovern this City, but it knows which way the wind is blowing, and it sees that it will never "pay" to go on backing up TWEED and his crew, at a time when public sentiment is rising against them. It asks what has become of the boasted honesty of the Citizens' Association? SANDS could tell it. He bartered it all away for a snug berth of $10,000 a year, and another for his son. "No party," says the Herald of TWEED's authors, "can stand against an appeal to rob the mass of their earnings, through their proper representatives, to levy their own taxes." Chances have different in this case, coming from TWEED's most powerful friend in the Press, to the support forward by a Republican Chairman of a Republican Association. How is it possible to reconcile this conflict of opinion, except upon the hypothesis that Mr. PETER COOPER is grossly duped by NATHANIEL SANDS? Listen to the journal which loudly clamored for the re-election of all Ring agents last November. Surely criticism coming from such a source cannot be said to be prompted by hostility to the Ring:

"It is the clearest case of 'taxation without representation' that has occurred since the American Revolution. It is a usurpation of power that would hardly be tolerated under any monarchy in Europe; for but one, we believe, out of the number named to act on this proposed Tax Commission is in any manner responsible to the people for the places they hold under the new City Charter. Two are in the Mayor, and it is fortunate for the people that he is an honest man. The Controller, the President of the Board of Public Parks and the Commissioner of the Department of Public Works, who, with the Mayor, are to compose the proposed Tax Commission, were appointed by the Mayor, although there was a show of an election in the case of the Controller in order to double-clinch his hold upon the office. Have the people through their representatives in the Common Council no rights which the Tammany Regency—slaves as they may be personally—are bound to respect? Let all Republicans and honest Democrats in the Legislature look before they leap into this trap. If they believe there is not a 'cat under the meal,' or a 'nigger in the wood-pile,' they had better prepare to swallow the Saddle Rock Munchausenism, 'hook and line, bob and sinker.'"

Now what answer can Mr. PETER COOPER make to that? How does he explain it to himself that he is recommending TWEED's new scheme, while the journals which are known as TWEED's organs denounce it? He must have intelligence enough to see that his position is at least very anomalous. He is where the Herald generally is, and the Herald is where he ought to be. Through some little chink of his mind, not yet stopped up by that adroit plumber and glazier, SANDS, a ray of light may penetrate, and show him how widely he has drifted from his true position. It certainly cannot be right that Mr. PETER COOPER and the Citizens' Association should swap places with old-established organs of the Ring. All that remains now is for PETER COOPER to be defended in the columns of the Sun. That will about finish him.

Turn of the Tide.

There are unmistakable indications that, for a time at least, the progress of life insurance, as a business, has encountered a check. During ten or twelve years the efforts put forth to popularize the system have been crowned with a success which has astonished the workers themselves. Year after year has written its record of wonderful advances; policies have been piled upon policies; agents have been multiplied until they became like the frogs of Egypt, in other respects than mere numbers; new companies have been extemporized and pushed into the field; old companies have heaped up assets and received vast incomes as the result of public confidence, and everything has gone merry as a marriage bell. The idea of such a thing as halting in this conquering march seems never to have entered the minds of these promoters of life insurance, and he would have been deemed a calumniator who hinted that retrogression was among the possibilities.

But the figures of 1870 will bring a shadow over this delectable dream. The movement has been backward. It is too soon to say how much the diminution will amount to, but the fact that there has been a considerable falling off in the business is clearly foreshadowed by the returns thus far made. We suppose it will be safe to estimate the decrease, in the sum insured, at one hundred million dollars, and in premium income at two or three millions. This falling off in business has not, however, been the uniform experience of all the companies, for some show exceptional prosperity and progress. But, as a whole, the life insurance mania has been checked quite unexpectedly and suddenly.

It was natural enough that the tide should turn, and silly in these sanguine officers and agents to suppose themselves and their schemes lifted above the contingencies inherent in all earthly things. The difficulty is that they are not prepared for the change, and have not taken in sail in time. Having expanded and extended their operations in a most extravagant fashion, the sudden necessity of practicing economy comes upon them with all the force of a new sensation of the unpleasant sort. Thinking that their field was the world, and that all they had to do was to put in the sickle and be happy in the harvesting, the new companies, particularly, have laid their plans for the future most lavishly. The commissions and other expenditures connected with the procurement of new business have been, by a frantic competition, brought up to so high a figure as to make the whistle a costly purchase. The young companies, struggling to reach the point where they might feel that their own lives were insured, have tilted against the rich old offices, whose business was worth struggling to retain, and between the two combatants the public have endured a pretty tight embrace. Such a warfare could not be expected to last forever with profit on all sides; and now the breathing spell has come.

This has come about, too, without reference to the failures whose occurrence has recently startled the community. For these failures took place too late to affect the business of 1870. And the fact that they have occurred is only now beginning to have its effect. This force will be felt during the current year, and will justify our prediction as to the relapse of the system from popular favor and confidence. The prestige of immunity from failure, which has been a glory heretofore, has gone. The possibility, nay, the probability, of other financial failures like those of the "Great Western" and the "Farmers' and Mechanics'," will hover like clouds over the future, and either repel persons from insuring, or make them so cautious that none but well-established companies will get their patronage. This is just where the life insurance business should land, after so long a season of experiment. If the class of this business be studious of this sensible fact, life insurance may yet prosper; but if the reckless competition, extravagance, and maladministration of the past few years are to continue, there will be much [illegible] in the community made to mourn, and many a [illegible] panics brought to bankruptcy.

The Surrender of Paris and After.

The final catastrophe is so near and so inevitable that it may be regarded as present. The curtain is about to fall on the siege of Paris, and the bloody drama of which it has formed the crowning situation, is about to assume a new phase, and probably to develop fresh characters. Stern as has been the ordeal through which Paris has passed, it has during its historical existence suffered greater privations and witnessed more sanguinary scenes than have attended the four months' Prussian investment. Nor it may fairly be questioned whether either Norman freebooter or Plantagenet invader ever inflicted a deeper wound on the susceptibilities of the Parisians than will the imminent occupation by the Prussians. When the Allies entered the city twice during the present century, they were not regarded as enemies by all the gay and volatile society of Paris. The friends of the old régime that had kept in obscurity or dissembled their true sentiments during the Republic, the Consulate and the Empire, and who were so suddenly confounded by the brief apparition of the captive of Elba, hailed the soldiers of the great European coalition as their deliverers from proscription and poverty. The helmeted Prussian was then loaded with favors by the titled dames of the Faubourg St. Germain, and even the memory of ancient feuds was unable to make the red-coated Englishman appear as an enemy of France. But now, the Germans will enter Paris amid a silence as grim and threatening as that which greeted CHARLES II. when he passed into London before the files of CROMWELL's veteran Ironsides.

"France is the centre of civilized nations, Paris is the centre of France, and the Boulevard des Italiens is the centre of Paris." The sentence is French, and its spirit is typical of the belief that has dominated France for more than two hundred years. NAPOLEON I. was the adored of the nation, because he embodied a splendid revival of the combined glories of LOUIS XIV. and HENRY IV.; NAPOLEON III. was a possibility, because he represented "a principle, a cause, and a defeat," and promised to revive the prestige that Bourbon, Citizen-King and Republic had alike failed to restore. And now, every Frenchman behind the desolate circle that fronts the foris in which he trusted so vainly, is reaping the whirlwind because the wind was sowed by those who preceded him—a proceeding, be it confessed, indorsed by many marks of his own approval. Henceforth the Arch of Triumph is a perpetual satire to the reflective Parisian, Versailles is a monument of hollow fame and of wounded national honor, the Tuilleries may furnish apartments to KING WILLIAM, and be thereafter a memory of shame to two generations of Parisians. Of course, it is quite possible that the Germans may content themselves with the military occupation of the exterior forts, and may spare the humiliated garrison and people the spectacle of their hosts passing under the proud architectural monument of the triumphs of the great Emperor. Whatever condition may be imposed, Paris will see enough of her foes to make her feel quite as unmistakably as she has done without seeing them, that the bitter cup of her abasement must be drained to the dregs.

And yet, there is this comfort for Paris, as for France, that a nobler and greater future is before her. She has cradled and she has strangled republican liberty before now. But the experience of three generations must at length have taught her that her only safety lies in cherishing and fostering the nascent freedom that she again holds in her hands. The third Republic has been the child of labor and sorrow, but it will be the more tenderly cherished and the more highly prized on that account. The proud boast of, "when France is satisfied, Europe is tranquil," will be replaced by the nobler one of, "with France republican, Europe cannot be long enslaved." And here, as the European centre of art, literature, politics and industry, inspired by the free and progressive spirit of a self-governed people, Paris will be a greater Power in the civilized world than she has ever been before, and with the light of freedom on "her beautiful bold brow," will rise from her abasement with lineaments far more lovely than those she bore before her fall.

Shipwrecked Mariners from the Saginaw.

Our first accounts of the wreck of the United States steamer Saginaw were necessarily transmitted by telegraph; and, standing alone, they gave a gloomy picture of the situation of her crew, and of their chances of rescue. Since then, however, letters have been received which give a different version of the affair, and warrant the hope that all who were left on the island, or coral reef, where the ill-fated ship struck and went to pieces, will be saved. Two vessels, one a small steamer, and the other a schooner, had left Honolulu, by the last advices, to bring the crew away, and we may soon look for tidings of the party.

It seems that the Captain's gig, which made the passage safely to the Sandwich Islands, and from which, in effecting a landing, poor Lieut. TALBOT and two of his men were drowned, brought a good many letters from the men left on the reef. One of these is from Paymaster READ, and is reassuring as regards the supply of food. He says distinctly that the party cannot want for meat; that they have an abundance of fish, seal, and turtle, together with flour, rice, and bread enough to last all hands for two and a half months. His letter ends with the statement that there never was a shipwrecked crew better provided with supplies. Another [illegible] All this seems to reduce the danger of the castaways to the possible casualts of wandering savages—a risk which, considering their geographical situation, may be set down as exceedingly small. On the whole, there is good cause for congratulation in these later and more cheering reports, and we hope soon to have the pleasure of announcing that the crew of the Saginaw have arrived in safety at San Francisco.

MINOR TOPICS.

The Senate, yesterday, passed a bill for repealing the income tax by a majority of one—not much to spare. It will be seen that several Senators spoke in favor of the tax, one being of option that it was not objectionable to the people, but only to the newspapers. He should have reversed this statement. The tax is only objectionable to the newspapers, because it is objectionable to the people. There is no necessity for keeping the tax any longer, and as it was never properly levied, and excited much discontent, the sooner it is swept in made off it the better. We may fairly hope that the people have now paid their last contribution to the Government under this unpopular impost.

An agreement to report bill for the admission of Colorado and New-Mexico as States is credited to the Senate Committee on Territories. There is no national advantage to be gained by this action, and many obvious disadvantages will result from it. Colorado is the population so much below the established ratio of representation that its admission as a State would be an injustice to more populous States. And the population of New-Mexico, whatever the exact number, is too mixed, and on the whole too inferior, in habits and intelligence, to be intrusted with the dignity and powers of Statehood. The interests to be served by premature admission are in both cases open to grave suspicion.

After the lapse of about twenty months, there has again been received trustworthy intelligence of the continued safety of Dr. LIVINGSTONE. All the absorbing interest of an era of stupendous change has not allowed the civilized world to forget the existence of the intrepid Scotchman who, after spending sixteen years of his life in the service of science and humanity, has already been for more than another five engaged in the hazardous solution of the last great moral problem of geographers, and in the opening up of the mysterious recesses of the African Continent to the light of modern progress. Dr. LIVINGSTONE will find on his return a very different Europe from that he left, but from the Old World as well as the New his final safety will be hailed with a fervid and unanimous enthusiasm such as the great actors on the historical stage can never hope to excite.

Newspaper correspondents who have recently passed through Germany, agree in testifying to the enormous drain of its able-bodied population that has resulted from the present war. One writer decidedly asserts that the anxiety for peace is nearly as great in Germany as in France, and that only among the landed proprietors and the professional classes did he hear any defense of the continued prosecution of the war. Such considerations will, doubtless, be present to the minds of the German leaders at Versailles, and will, it may be hoped, render them disposed to subject France to no unnecessary humiliation, and so drive her to the despairing resort of a desolating and hopeless war of a disorganized populace against a victorious and perfectly-equipped army.

"The ax has been laid to the root of the tree." Dr. WOLFE has received the full measure of the legal penalty attached to his crime, and our City Courts have before them at least one example of the thorough and independent discharge of duty by a public prosecutor and a most righteous award of justice by a City Judge, in relation to a class of offenses which it has been too much their habit to treat with culpable leniency. Let it not be readily imagined, however, that we have heard the last of WOLFE for the present. Out of the wages of blood he has, like the rest of the villainous fraternity to which he belongs, resources enough to fight every step of the remaining ground that the law allows him. We take the words of Judge BEDFORD to mean exactly what they say, that "all abortionists, be they rich or poor, male or female," will have the same impartial measure of justice meted out to them, "irrespective of influence or consideration," but, remembering the experience of the past, we shall wait to see whether his example and that of District-Attorney FOLLOWS is generally imitated, before congratulating the community on the commencement of a greatly-needed work of reform in our local administration of justice.

We congratulate the Working Men's Convention, now in session at Albany, on having drawn up a bill containing three sensible proposals. The first is the abolition of the contract system in the State prisons—a system which all prison reformers have long held to be the most destructive to discipline and the most conducive to official corruption of all the abuses of our penal institutions. The second is to prevent the employment of minors under fourteen years of age, a proposal which with certain restrictions admitting of the admixture of work and education, would prove in practice a real social benefaction. The third [illegible] appropriations, direct or indirect, which may be solicited in aid of private schemes and enterprises." Congress surely needs to be reminded of the demands and expectations of the people upon this subject. The practice of entertaining schemes alien at Washington has rarely been exceeded. They are so all kinds of projects—notably for steam-ships—and the greatest regard in their behalf has so plausible as they are vicious. It is necessary to move them firmly and impartially. If a beginning is made in the exhibiting line, no one knows where the end will be. The only safe policy is that which dictates the rejection of all claims of the sort. Justice to the tax-payers should generally be accorded to speculators.

Denmark, according to a cable telegram, is becoming, not unnaturally, apprehensive that the day of the smaller States has almost passed in Europe. The tendency to centres of national activity having kindred ties of race and language, which is one of the best marked of recent history, has, in the main, been beneficial to its influence. There exist, nevertheless, very good reasons, both social and political, for the continued preservation of the minor continental States. One of the most obvious of these is their position as natural barriers against great and ambitious nations, and a consequent diminution of the danger of frequent disputes and an increase of difficulties in the way of national invasion. This forms the great argument of those who advocate the reestablishment of Alsace and Lorraine, thereby interposing a solid wedge of territory between France and Germany. Another of their advantages is the comparative lightness of taxation, which is a result of their subordinate position and their exclusive war establishments. In the central kingdom and Holland, and to some extent also in that of Denmark, this has helped, in a very remarkable degree, to develop industrial prosperity and social content, and so has greatly aided the cause of civilization, by demonstrating how slight military ambition certain nations have.

[illegible] Washington has been reminded of the third anniversary of probably the most famous literary character which this country has ever produced. Mr. GEORGE TICKNOR, LL.D., was born in Boston, on the 1st of August, 1791, and was therefore, nearly eighty years of age at the time of his death. He received his early education in his native city, and in 1807 entered Dartmouth College, being at the time only twelve years of age. After his graduation, in 1809, he spent three years in classical and literary studies at home, and then turned his attention, for a time, to jurisprudence. This latter study he relinquished merely as a part of general education, and although he was admitted to the Bar in 1813, he never intended to devote himself to the practice of law. Dissatisfied with the degree of learning afforded by the schools of this country at that period, he proceeded, in 1815, to Gottingen and took a course of lectures in the famous university of that place, and in an acquaintance with their "venerable" and leading men, and the daily use of their great capitals. As a practical part of this experiment, he spent two years at the University of Göttingen, and during the three years following he visited London, Edinburgh, Paris, Rome, and other centres of learning, and studied extensively in all the countries of southern and western Europe. Wherever he went he made the acquaintance of scholars and literary men, and laid the foundation of those friendships which, in after years, were so honorable to him. Among the distinguished men with whom he came in contact were JEFFREY, WORDSWORTH, SOUTHEY, Lord STRANGE, Sir WALTER SCOTT, ROSCOE, MACKINTOSH, Lord HOLLAND, GOETHE, SCHLEGEL, Mme. de STAEL and many others of note in the world of letters. His culture and moral position gave him a ready welcome in the highest circles, and his intelligence, affability and many kindly and fascinating qualities made him a favorite wherever he became personally known. A little-due portrait of Sir WALTER SCOTT, which the great poet and novelist caused to be painted expressly as a present to him, has long in his study in Boston for many years.

During his studies and travels in Europe Mr. TICKNOR made himself thoroughly familiar with the history, language and literature of Germany, France, Spain and Italy. In 1817, before his return to his native land, he was selected to fill the newly-established Professorship at Harvard College, of Modern Languages, Literature and Belles-Lettres. He assumed the duties of that position the following year, and by the zeal which he displayed gave an impulse to that branch of learning which it had never before received in this country, and which has been felt in all our higher institutions of learning down to the present time. The lectures which he gave during the seventeen years of his connection with the University contained in themselves a comprehensive history of the literature which he taught, and were intended by their interesting style and comprehensiveness of information to inspire a taste for the careful study of the modern languages. He also superintended the classes and selected teachers of the first order of merit to conduct the various recitations. Some of these he sought out and discovered under peculiar circumstances. One excellent teacher of French had been a political exile, and was picked up in the kitchen of a Boston hotel.

In 1835 Mr. TICKNOR resigned his Professorship, and again set out for Europe, this time accompanied by his family. He had already formed the design of writing a history of Spanish literature, and had collected what, an ordinary book-maker would have regarded as ample material. He remained abroad several years, visiting all the most extensive libraries of the different centres of learning, and traveling in all parts of Spain to gather such out-of-the-way knowledge as is only recorded in local history. He visited all the prominent scholars and writers of that country, and they were not few, even at that time, when the public affairs of the nation were degraded to the lowest level, and made a collection of Spanish books, which he brought home with him, probably not equalled in any private library in the world. With his mind stored with all the lore of that once great and chivalric people, and his library filled with the best written and printed material which could be gathered by a faithful personal application to the work, he addressed himself to the task of writing his history. It was completed in 1848, and published simultaneously in New-York and London, in three octavo volumes. It at once took the very foremost rank as a classic in the history of literature. No work has ever appeared which displays a more complete and accurate knowledge of the subject on the part of the writer, a sounder judgment, or more unerring taste, and more elegant and judicious use of criticism. Its merit was at once acknowledged by the best scholars the world over, and nowhere more promptly and more cordially than in Spain; and it is universally regarded as the most thorough, minute and comprehensive work of its kind in existence. It has been translated into Spanish and German, and a [illegible] carefully revised edition has, within a few years, been brought out in English.

Having accomplished the greatest work of his literary life, Mr. TICKNOR passed his days in Boston amid his books, making occasional contributions to literature, and pursuing the studies which he loved. His mansion, at the head of Park-street, overlooking the historic pleasure-ground of Boston, the Common, and standing, nearly opposite the State-house, which the witty poet doctor has immortalized as the "Hub of the Universe," was the centre of the highest culture, and of the choicest literary and social life of the modern Athens. He numbered among his personal friends the leading statesmen, authors and scholars of his time, and it was a witticism of the celebrated THEODORE PARKER that no man could consider himself of any account in the world of Boston, if he was not admitted to Mr. TICKNOR'S study. He was not, however, in any sense aristocratic or exclusive. Although he rarely appeared at any public demonstration, and was personally known to few not those who frequented the walks of learning, he sympathized with merit and talent, wherever found, and many a poor student at Harvard can testify to his kindly encouragement, and his friendly interest in his welfare. More substantial aid was also furnished those men struggling against "poverty's unconquerable bar," though the fact was generally known only to the grateful recipients.

One of the most intimate of his literary friends was WM. H. PRESCOTT, the historian. In fact, their relation to each other was rather that of a brother and enthusiastic admiration than of friendship, in its ordinary sense, and when PRESCOTT died Mr. TICKNOR wrote the history of his life. It was to him, as he says in the preface, a labor of love, and, as a consequence, it forms one of the most charming biographies in the language. It was published in 1864, and for a work of its class gained an unusual popularity.

Another distinguished personage with whom the was on the most intimate terms was DANIEL WEBSTER, who for many years held as high a place in the estimation of the people of Massachusetts as it has ever been the fortune of any man to attain among the people with whom he lived. Mr. TICKNOR first met him at Dartmouth College, and, after his removal to Boston, became his intimate personal friend. He was often consulted by Mr. WEBSTER with regard to the public conduct of the latter, and many of the finest speeches of the great New-England orator were submitted to his criticism and revision. He always believed in WEBSTER, even in the closing years of his public life, when he had lost much of the confidence formerly reposed in him by the people of New-England. He was one of the literary executors of the great statesman, and when his nephew and valued friend, Mr. GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS, who was associated with him in that delicate trust, undertook the task of writing the biography of WEBSTER, his written reminiscences and retentive memory was an ever present help in the work. He took a great personal interest in its progress, and it was submitted to him chapter by chapter for revision or suggestion.

Among his literary labors not already mentioned was an edition of the "Remains" of NATHAN APPLETON HAVEN, with a memoir, a translation of LAMARTINE'S GIRONDISTS, and numerous critical and historical sketches first published in the North American Review.

Mr. TICKNOR was one of the founders and a constant friend of the Public Library of Boston, undoubtedly the best institution of its kind in the country. It was mainly (through his representations) that it received its munificent endowment from the late JOSHUA BATES, and his taste and zealous assistance have contributed largely to the excellence of the collection and the admirable plan on which the library is conducted. His own private library, which is one of the finest in Boston, is now in the possession of a single individual in the country, and, as already remarked, his library of Spanish literature has probably no equal in the world outside of the royal institutions of Europe.

Until within a few months past, Mr. TICKNOR has enjoyed a remarkable degree of health, and his vigor of mind remained unabated to the last, with the exception of a weakening of his memory, which formerly possessed a wonderful power. His literary success was not showy, but substantial; his personal character was without a blot, and at home and among his friends he was found ever genial and kindly, the friend of the deserving, and the enemy only of what was base or unworthy. He passed away tranquilly amid the circle of his loving friends, and the news of his death will be received with the gentle sorrow and grateful regret ever felt for the great and good who leave the world which they have benefited in the fullness of years and of honors.

Wilhelm Weitling—An Inventor of Fruitlessness—A Remarkable Career.

WILHELM WEITLING, one of the original organizers and leaders of the co-operative trades-union movement, died in this City on Wednesday evening, 24th inst., in the sixty-third year of his age. He was born in the ancient and historical town of Magdeburg, Prussia, on the 5th of October, 1808. His parents were in humble circumstances, and at an early age he learned the tailor's trade, and for some time was employed in his father's shop. While thus engaged he found time to add to his previous common school education by constant reading in his spare hours. In this way he acquired the rudiments of the French and English languages. He was an active thinker, and was constantly planning improvements. The idea of co-operation seems to have been awakened in his mind at that time, from observing the many disadvantages that the poor mechanics and tradesmen labored under in their struggle against the power of capitalists and politicians. After deveoting much thought to the matter he removed to Zurich, Switzerland, and without any capital of his own, started a co-operative society and a newspaper—both devoted to freedom and unity in trade, labor, and government.

He at once encountered the enmity of the authorities, who proclaimed him a seditious and dangerous person, and threatened terrible results if he and his associated did not desist from their schemes. The co-operators were unmoved, however, and held regular meetings as usual. While in the midst of one of these, at night, they were surprised by the Police and troops, who burst in the doors, broke up the meeting, and arrested all the members. At the same time the newspaper office was assailed, the presses destroyed, and the type thrown into the lake.

He was imprisoned for two years, and after having served that term, he reorganized the dispersed society. He then formed others successively at the Cities of Berlin and Hamburg. Again he suffered persecution. The Societies were compelled to meet secretly, and he was hunted for, but found secure refuge in a friendly house, where he remained hidden in a vault fourteen days. With Mr. CHARLES J. MULLER (now in this City) and other exiles, he escaped under cover of a dark night to an American ship, and came to this country. At the outbreak of the revolution, in 1848, the two returned to Paris, joined the revolutionists, and rendered valuable service. In 1851 they returned to this country, and WEITLING started a German weekly newspaper called the Republique der Arbeiter.

Although he had no capital of his own, and relied upon a moderate co-operative aid of the societies he organized, his subscription list in a month's time reached 6,000. The Staats Zeitung then circulated but about 4,000 copies. As an editorial writer and manager he was remarkably successful, until some division among the societies caused disorganization and failure. He was also the leading spirit of a communist colony, which emigrated to Iowa, and finally failed.

For seven years he was Register at Castle Garden. He published two books: Harmony and Freedom and The Gospel for Poor Sinners, each of which ran through four editions. He received nine different patents for improvements to sewing-machines, among which were the double-stitch, button-hole and embroidery attachments now in general use. From these he never received any benefit. Another patent he had recently taken out for a dress-trimming crimper, upon which he had labored seventeen years. He leaves several other unfinished machines. An unpublished work on astronomy, advancing entirely new ideas as to the relative movements, position, &c., of the earth, sun, moon, and other celestial bodies, is pronounced by competent critics as interesting and worthy of commendation. He has always been a profound student in astronomy, and this manuscript is the fruit of fourteen years of mental toil. At 6 o'clock on Wednesday morning he was struck with paralysis, and died at 7 o'clock in the evening. The funeral will take place at 1 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, at his late residence, No. 178 Stanton-street, and it is probable that a large number of the co-operative societies that he founded will attend. He leaves a wife and six children, the eldest only fifteen years of age, in poor circumstances and entirely unprovided for.

WASHINGTON.

Passage of the Bill Repealing the Income Tax in the Senate—The Alabama Claims Question in Committee—Immediate Relief for the Indians—The Steam-ship Subsidy Bills—Civil Service Reform.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The Senate today voted to repeal the income tax after Jan. 1, 1871, by a vote of twenty-six to twenty-five. The debate has been uninteresting, because little or nothing new has been contributed to the subject, either of arguments or facts. Mr. JOHNSON made a long speech favoring the repeal of all internal taxes, and submitted an amendment to that effect to the pending bill, which failed, of course, as he afterwards failed to vote for the unamended resolution of repeal. A large number of Senators took part in the discussion, the speeches generally being very brief. Messrs. BUCKINGHAM, COLE, CORBETT, FLANAGAN, CONKLING and CARPENTER advocated the repeal; Messrs. MORRILL of Vermont, HOWELL, TIPTON and CRAGIN opposed it. A point urged by several against repeal was that the cry, as Mr. CRAGIN called it, came from the small number who pay the tax and not the body of the people not affected by it. About 4 o'clock a motion to go into Executive Session was voted down, and it being thus evident that a majority of the Senate were determined on a speedy settlement, after the usual number of speeches by those who "did not want to occupy the time of the Senate longer," but "felt constrained to explain the reason for the votes they were about to give," a call of the yeas and nays was ordered. The call was the most interesting proceeding of the day. The yeas led the list for some time, and when thirteen Senators had voted for the resolution only five had voted against it. Then there was a change, and first one side and then the other was ahead. Finally, the call was concluded with a vote of twenty-five. There was the usual pause for those who had not voted as first to record themselves before the declaration of the vote. Mr. CAMERON was the only one to accept the privilege, and he voted "yea," and decided the fate of the resolution. The Senate immediately adjourned, thinking enough was accomplished for one day, and accordingly refusing to go into secret session for the consideration of executive business. The Ways and Means Committee further considered the question of repeal, and received from Commissioner PELLSORTON the promised statistics regarding the amount of tax expected from this source under the law as it now stands. The amount (given in detail elsewhere) is a little over $6,000,000 from personal income, and a little over $4,000,000 from corporations, or $12,500,000 all told. No vote has yet been had in committee.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House considered the Alabama Claims bill today, but reached no result. Mr. PARKER, of New-York, counsel for some of the insurance companies, was before the Committee, and made a statement embodying their wishes. The fact that the British Government would gladly settle with each individual claimant if it could have the friendly assent of this Government, and the further fact that many of the claimants are anxious to settle in this way, renders it difficult for Congress to decide that the United States shall not assume these claims. Yet the proposition, which will probably be reported by the Committee, looks only to the appointment of a commission to determine the amount and character of these claims. The matter will be further considered next Monday.

THE INDIANS TO BE FED.

The consideration of the Indian bill was completed in the House today, and the spirit manifested yesterday, viz., to vote any reasonable amount to feed the Indians and keep the peace, was even more apparent. To this end the item for beef and flour for the various tribes of the Dakota Sioux was increased from $268,000 to $1,314,000. The sum of $165,000 was also voted to relieve the immediate necessities of RED CLOUD'S band, and other destitute Indians, who have been coming into Fetterman, Laramie, and other military posts, and whose relief the War Department recently provided for by ordering that they be fed from the commissaries of the army until other provision was made. An amendment providing that all expenditures of the Indian Bureau of any amounts exceeding $500 in connection with the Indian service, shall be first approved by the Board of Indian Commissioners, was offered, today, by Mr. BECK, and agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The Pension Appropriation bill was considered by the Senate today, and passed in concurrence. An attempt was made to amend the House bill by increasing the appropriation by the amount necessary to pay the increased pensions, under the bill passed by the Senate a few days since, but the Senate refused to raise the appropriation in anticipation of the concurrence of the House in the bill increasing pensions. The Military Academy Appropriation bill is printed, and the Committee are ready to report to the Senate two other appropriation bills—the Legislative, Executive and Judicial, and the Post-office. Mr. COLE, who acts as Chairman of the Appropriation Committee in the absence of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, will try to bring the bills before the Senate as fast as they come from the House.

THE STEAM-SHIP SUBSIDY BILLS.

To-morrow is the day set down by the Senate for the consideration of the Steam-ship Subsidy bills, but it would seem doubtful if they are reached, since civil service reform holds its place as unfinished business. The bill which Mr. CONKLING introduced to aid in building twenty steam-ships, has not yet been reported from the Committee of Commerce. That Committee has a special meeting to-morrow morning on the Bill, and it will no doubt be favorably reported.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. SCHURZ holds the floor at 1 o'clock to-morrow on civil service reform. Notice has been given that he will offer the bill that he has drawn as a substitute for Mr. TRUMBULL'S bill now before the Senate. This will open up a discussion on the relative merits of the several propositions on the subject, and it may remain before the Senate some time longer.

THE INDIAN BUREAU INVESTIGATION.

The investigation into the Indian Bureau was continued last evening by the examination of Dr. BONNER, formerly surgeon in the army, Acting Agent at Cheyenne, who testified in regard to the receipt of cattle at that point. Gen. MYERS, of the Quartermaster's Department, was also examined on the question of the cost of transportation.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE INDIAN TERRITORIAL QUESTION.

The House Committees on public Lands and Territories, this morning appointed a subcommittee, with a view to reconcile the differences of the two Committees in relation to the bill to establish an Indian territorial government.

THE RECONSTRUCTION COMMITTEE.

The Committee on Reconstruction have had no meeting recently. Several propositions on the amnesty question are pending before them.

TRIAL OF CONGRESSMAN BUTLER.

In the Criminal Court today, the trial of Representative R. R. BUTLER, of Tennessee, charged with forgery, commenced.

REVENUE MATTERS.

Commissioner PELLSORTON writes to the Committee of Ways and Means that, in consequence of fermented liquors being put up in half, quarter, third and eighth barrels, while the tax upon an entire barrel, under the existing law is $1, less 1½ per cent., equaling 92½ cents, discrepancies occur in adjusting the accounts of Internal Revenue Collectors, in consequence of the difficulty in disposing of fractional remainders. He recommends that the law be amended, so as to impose a tax of 92 cents on fermented liquors, which figure is capable of being divided into all fractional parts of a barrel, as above stated, without a fractional remainder. Gen. MAX WEBER, Assessor of the Sixth District of New-York has been appointed a Supervisor of Internal Revenue. His present district has been consolidated with the Fourth Internal Revenue District of New-York, and he will enter upon his duties of Supervisor as soon as he can close up the business of his present office.

Assistant Assessor CHARLES B. BLACKER, with ten soldiers, made a raid last week on illicit stills in Georgia, and destroyed seven establishments, which were complete in their appointments, and a large quantity of mash, and arrested four of the distillers. The prisoners were held for trial by a United States Commissioner.

IMMIGRATION DURING THE YEAR.

Official returns have been received at the Bureau of Statistics from all but a few small ports, showing that the total number of passengers arrived in the United States during the year ending Dec. 31, 1870, was 412,686, of which 354,189 were immigrants. The net immigration for the corresponding period of 1869 was 352,387, showing a decrease, occasioned by the war in Europe, of 31,118 in 1870.

NOMINATIONS.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day.

GEO. W. BLACKBURN, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of Tennessee; MUNSON H. TRUMBULL, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District of New-York. (Fourth and Sixth consolidated.) MARSHALL B. BLOCK, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Thirty-second District of New-York; First Lieut. JOHN E. MOGHINS, to be Captain of the Ordnance Department.

OUR NEXT TWO STATES.

Colorado and Lincoln—Their Resources, Product and Growth—Golden Opportunities—Splendid Enterprises Already Inaugurated—The Present and Future.

From Our Special Correspondent.

DENVER, Col., Dec. 28, 1870.

Among the important bills before Congress in behalf of the Territories, are those for the admission of Colorado and New-Mexico as States. As public attention will be called to the matter, some facts about the growth of these Territories will be of interest. Colorado was set off in 1860 from Kansas and Nebraska. It has an area of 100,000 square miles, and a population according to the census of 39,861. It has 355 miles of railroad within its borders, of which 226 miles were built this year. Its mining product for 1870 foots up $2,750,000, its crops $4,551,000, and its manufactures $1,226,000. The settled portion of the Territory is wholly east of the mountains. A strip of fifty miles wide along the slope, from the northern to the southern border, will take in about all of the peopled and producing parts. It includes the most of Gilpin, Clear Creek, Boulder, Summit, Park, Pueblo, Huerfano, Weld and Arraphoe Counties. All the important mineral developments, the best farms, and the principal towns lie within this belt. Here are Denver, Central City, Georgetown, Black Hawk, Nevada, Idaho, Cariboo, Boulder, Golden, Pueblo, Colorado City, Greeley, Trinidad and Cañon City. The South Platte, with its tributaries, the Big Thompson, Cache La Poudre, Cherry Creek, and the Arkansas, with its numerous branches, are more farmed within this area than over all the rest of their great extent.

PROGRESS DURING THE LAST YEAR.

Colorado has this year taken more steps of substantial progress than in any other year of her existence. There has been a time back in 1861-2 when the population reached sixty thousand. Our census for 1870 shows a loss from that of 1860. The reason is apparent. There have been here the same experiences as in all mining Territories—an unsettled population, fitful, swelling in at the reports of new discoveries, and then surging out for better pay elsewhere, carrying with it all the population and growth of previous years. There are Breckenridge, Buckskin Joe, Fairplay, deserted mining camps, relics of the Pike's Peak excitement, containing, ten years ago, from 3,000 to 10,000 inhabitants each. The lack of transportation, of supplies, the high cost of labor, hostile Indians, all those causes that for most of the time since the organization of this Territory have been operating against its development have gradually been overcome. Starting with 1867, with a population of 20,000, the Territory has been going through its new and permanent growth. The mines have been worked with increasing economy. The best machinery has been introduced. Old mines have been reworked. There is less running for luck. The area over which mining has been carried on this year is not so great as in previous years, but the average results have been far better. Georgetown, the centre of the silver district, has increased some five hundred in population in the twelve months, and has shipped $1,375,000 to the East. Central City, the principal centre for the gold district, has shipped $1,650,000. The placer mines of Summit County have grown into importance, and their yield is placed at $500,000. The new Grand Island District, of which Cariboo is capital, lying in the edge of Boulder County, has in the six months since its discovery yielded $275,000. The South Park mines have turned out richly. The receipts at the Branch Mint at Denver, from all the mines of the Territory, for the year ending Dec. 1, was $1,195,000. It is Gov. MCCOOK'S estimate that about one-fourth of the whole product passes through the mint. The rest is sold at the banks, goes out of the Territory by express and private conveyance, and is freighted to Newark and Swansea for separation. The total gold and silver yield in Colorado for the year 1870 then will approximate $4,500,000. New mining interests, hardly noticed heretofore, have this year attained surprising results in Colorado. We refer to coal-mining. Between the South Boulder and Golden the coal-seams cover an area of twenty square miles. Openings have been made in many places, always revealing workable coal in beds from five to sixteen feet in thickness. Throughout the Boulder coal region are valuable deposits of iron ore, consisting of hydrates and red hematites, free from phosphorus, and of the purest kinds, well adapted to the manufacture of steel. The quantity of surface ore is estimated at one hundred thousand tons. Two and one-third tons of wasted ore produce one ton of iron. The locality where these iron mines are found is convenient for limestone, (used as a flux in smelting the ores,) sand for molding, grit stones for building purposes, and fire-clay. The coal is comparatively free from sulphur. Coking works have been established near one of the banks, and at another experiments have been made at smelting the iron ore, which is found to yield from seventy to eighty per cent. of pure metal. The experiments thus far made show that for the production of one ton of pig-iron three tons of the ore, two hundred pounds of limestone, and from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and fifty bushels of clear coal are required. It is estimated that the area over which these iron deposits abound is fifty square miles. The economic importance of this great coal and iron district will be the better realized when we look at the fact that we must go from six hundred to one thousand miles on every side before we find them anywhere so associated and so abundant.

PRODUCTS OF THE SOIL.

How the mining towns of Colorado would get their supplies of bread and beef was solved several seasons back by the ranchmen of the South Platte. These dry acres farm exceedingly well. The crops of 1867 were large enough to supply the wants of the Territory, and since that time they have been exporting grain and produce to the Missouri River towns, to the military stations on the Union and Kansas Pacific Railroads and to the mining regions of Wyoming and Montana. During the past Fall, over 1,000 barrels of Colorado flour has been shipped to Kansas City and St. Louis. It is considered a better quality than that obtained from Southern Illinois wheat, and at Cheyenne, Santa Fé, and even Omaha, where Colorado and States flour are quoted side by side in the market reports, the former is always from $1 50 to $2 per barrel the highest. Dairy products are also important in yield and quality. Step into a Denver grocery and you find the first place in the West where New-York and Vermont butter are set aside. Colorado ranch butter and cheese are premium products, and bring from five to fifteen cents a pound more than any other. The Territory is now self-supplying in the whole range of agriculture, except in fruit, which California and Utah now provide; but trees and vineyards have been begun, and in two years from now there will be amounts of this at home. As a sample of farming results we give the value of the products of three counties as gathered from the assessment rolls for this year:

	Grain.	Produce.	Dairy.
Arrapahoe, (Denver)	$550,000	$250,000	$125,000
Jefferson, (Golden)	322,000	197,000	78,000
Boulder, (Boulder City)	310,000	85,000	67,000

In Arrapahoe County there are forty sections of farming land high up away from streams, that are formed by irrigation. The average yield this year has been fifty per cent. better than from the farms in the valleys.

STOCK-RAISING IN COLORADO.

Stock-raising is an important industry in Colorado. The best grazing lands are along the South Platte and its mountain tributaries, and the Arkansas. The latter courses through Southern Colorado, and along its valley the great herds are mostly pastured. They are driven north in the Spring and shipped to Chicago and St. Louis, for beef. A late estimate shows that there are now in the Territory about 250,000 head of cattle and 75,000 sheep. During the past Fall considerable droves were shipped East. A new business has just been inaugurated in Denver, that of shipping dressed beef to Chicago. Three hundred and fifty head were slaughtered the past week and packed into ten cars. The common box-cars were used, with frames set in for hanging up the beef. About two car-loads of wool and ten of hides are shipped East from Denver every month.

RAILROADS.

Three railroads now centre in Denver. The cash receipts of the station are from $45,000 to $65,000 a month, with an increase each month from the time that the first railroad was opened, six months ago. The plans for railroad building another year throughout the territory are on a large scale. The Kansas Pacific, seeking the Arkansas River and New-Mexico trade, talk of building, in the Spring, from Kit Carson to Fort Lyons, sixty miles; also a branch from Denver to Georgetown, forty miles, to secure the mountain trade and to checkmate the Union Pacific, who, at the back of the Colorado Central, are pushing a road up the South Platte from Julesburg, via Greeley and Burlington, furnishing an easy outlet to the East for the mining product, and giving Chicago a cut-off by which she is likely to gather back all the trade which St. Louis stole from her when the Kansas Pacific was opened. And thus, while the Union Pacific is trying to get control of the Colorado trade by building on the very line which was originally staked out for it, the Central Pacific, already "the king-bee" west of the mountains, has its representatives east for money in aid of a project for pushing on from Salt Lake City eastward through Western Colorado, along the Cherokee Trail Pass of the Rocky Mountains, to clasp hands with the Kansas Pacific at Denver, and secure a second outlet to the Missouri River. The building a railroad along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, from Denver to Santa Fé, has been a favorite project in this section of the country for several years. The trade of Denver now reaches twelve million dollars a year. It has become the supply depot for Colorado and a large part of New-Mexico. Freighting teams now carry between four million and five million dollars worth of goods, during the year, to Santa Fé, the Cimmaron and Burro Mines, and the farming settlements along the Rio Grande. To retain and enlarge this trade, and to get ahead of Kansas City and Leavenworth—both of which are pushing their railroad enterprises toward Santa Fé—the merchants of Denver have considered the plan of building to Santa Fé, via Pueblo and Trinidad, 430 miles.

RESOURCES OF NEW-MEXICO.

New-Mexico has an area of 115,000 square miles, about twice as large as the State of New-York, and her population, according to the census just taken, is 114,000, of which 86,000 are whites, and the remainder Indians and half-breeds. The Territory is divided into thirteen counties, the most thickly settled being Santa Fé, Grant, Taos, Colfax, San Miguel, Mora and Bernalillo. There are three judicial districts. The Territorial Governor is WILLAM A. PILE, formerly Representative in Congress from the St. Louis District, Missouri. The military Department is under command of Major-Gen. GEO. W. GETTY, District Commander. The Delegate to Congress is Hon. JOSE FRANCISCO CHAVES, a native of New-Mexico. The Judiciary is composed of Chief-Justice Judge PALEN, of New-York; Judge JOHNSON, of Pennsylvania, and Judge WATERS, of Missouri. The Territorial Legislature consists of a Council and House of Representatives, the former having eight members and the latter fifteen. The sessions are biennial.

SANTA FE AND OTHER PLACES.

Santa Fé, the capital, built mostly of one-story adobe houses, contains about 5,000 inhabitants, mostly Mexicans and Indians. Here upon the Plains, in the heart of our worst civilization, is an American city 300 years old. When our Pilgrim fathers were shivering through their first Winter, Santa Fé was forty years old. Here are the descendants of the old Castilians whose prowess made illustrious the reign of FERDINAND and ISABELLA a decayed, decaying town, hostile to progress, and so much unlike anything in America that one feels a stranger in a strange land. Seventy miles south is Albuquerque, younger, but with all the signs of ignorance and sloth. Here is the rich valley of the Rio Grande, stretching through the territory north and south, gathering within its area nine-tenths of the whole population, its splendid acres untilled, except to supply the scant wants of the settlers. Traders, farmers, mechanics, with no ambition to build up, occupying a Territory equal in resources to Colorado, sit listlessly, "joined to their idols," never roused to energy except to keep out Americans and progress. But even the Mexicans are beginning to realize that "old things are passed away." Since the beginning of 1868, capital in the hands of intelligent labor has taken possession of some of the best mines and farming lands. Americans and English are swarming in. Even the towns are brushing up, Santa Fé is beginning life again. Albuquerque, Los Vegas, Mora, Elizabethtown and Cimmaron are looking ahead, while Ralston and Silver City owe almost their entire growth to the past year.

HIDDEN TREASURES.

The resources of New-Mexico are not well understood. The hostility of the Mexican and Indian population has prevented explorations and developments. Until the past year but little was known except what had been gathered from the several surveys for continental railroads. Even now almost the entire region west of the Rio Grande remains a sealed book. The mining regions now being developed lie in the headwaters of the Canadian and Rio Pecos Rivers along the Raton mountains and between them and the Rio Grande. Within this area of twenty square miles are the Cimmaron, Burro and Placiere mining regions, the Vermejo, Moreno, Mora, Gallinto, and Taos Valleys—the developed gold, silver, iron, and coal region of New Mexico. The centres of the gold district are Elizabethtown, Maxwell's, Cimmaron, Los Vegas, and Taos; of the silver district, Ralston and Silver City. Coal, iron, lead, copper, and gypsum, have been found in abundance at various places over this area. At Vegas we found gypsum used for building purposes. The footings of the mineral product for the year are about as follows: Cimmaron mines, $350,000; Grant County, including Burro and Placiere Mountains, $425,000; Taos and other districts, $214,000. Total, $989,000. This result is nearly double that of last year.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR EXTENSIVE FARMING.

The opportunities for extensive farming and grazing in New-Mexico are becoming realized. The product at this time is barely sufficient to supply its own sparse population, but from the progress made this year it is evident that there will be great gain. The valleys of the Rio Grande, Mora and Taos show the best crops, and afford the best grazing. Irrigation is more generally resorted to than in Colorado, the cost on large bodies of land averaging not over a dollar per acre. A local paper, urging the opportunities for stock-raising in Colfax County, gives the following paragraph, which will apply equally to other portions of the Territory:

"The climate is subject to no sudden changes; the rich valleys possess an almost inexhaustible supply of pasturage; water is pure and plenty, and the expense of housing in the Winter months is unnecessary. Stock can graze out all year round, and constantly improve in condition. And our climate is so capable and healthy that cattle are subject to no diseases."

RAILROADS AND WHAT THEY WILL BRING.

New-Mexico is without railroads. With their advent its growth will be materially hastened. The Southern Pacific Railroad is surveyed through the lower border of the Territory. The Kansas Pacific will pass through the northwestern part, the Denver and Albuquerque will open the valley of the Rio Grande. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and the Kansas City and Santa Fé Roads are now in process of construction through Kansas, their ultimate object being to reach the heart of New-Mexico. All these plans will in time, be carried out. They will do more to civilize the Territory than any other agency. They will people its plains and mountains, develop its mines and farming lands, introduce manufactures, commerce, and all the elements of growth. The Indians will go to their reservations. A new and energetic population will take their place. With the seven hundred miles of railroad that these projects promise her we may look for great things in the future of the territory. Whether the work of admission is completed this year or next, Colorado and New-Mexico are doubtless to be the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth States.

STATISTICS.

A careful estimate, compiled from the records and assessors' rolls of the two Territories, gives the following statistics of population, products, revenue, &c.:

	Colorado.	New Mexico.
Population	39,861	114,000
Mining products, 1870	$2,750,000	$400,000
Arricultural products	4,551,000	1,375,000
Lumber	1,116,000	60,000
Manufactures	1,226,000	350,000
Value of Cattle	250,000	650,000
Revenue receipts	24,000	20,000

BENEVOLENT CONCERT AT STEINWAY HALL.

The vocal and instrumental concert in aid of the funds of the German Ladies' Society for Widows and Orphans, given at Steinway Hall last evening, attracted, in spite of the storm, an audience of fair dimensions. Mme. MARIE SEEBACH lent the aid of her talent to the influence of an exceedingly fine programme, and recited HEINRICH'S ballads of "Schön Hedwig" and "Der Haideknabe" with great effect. Miss MARIE KEEBS played CHOPIN'S polonaise, in A flat, and LISZT'S "Lucia" with her usual finish. The clear and expressive execution of Miss FERNANDE TEDESCA was never made more conspicuous than by that young lady's performance of DAVID'S variations on a theme by MOZART, and of VIEUXTEMPS' "Fantaisie Brillante" last night. The other artists were Mme. KRUSE-MICHALESI, Mr. FREDERICK STEINS and Mr. WM. CANDIDUS, three well-known artists. Mr. L. DACHAUER presided at the organ.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE. Vol. XLII.
HARPER'S WEEKLY, An Illustrated Journal of Civilization. Vol. XIV.
HARPER'S BAZAR, A Repository of Fashion, Pleasure and Instruction.

The handsome and substantial volumes whose titles stand at the head of this article, may be fairly regarded as representing the present state of American periodical literature, and its emancipation from its earlier dependence upon that of England. When the first number of Harper's New Monthly Magazine was issued, but little more than twenty years ago, a considerable portion of its contents was drawn, like that of its American contemporaries, from foreign magazines. The task of "judicious selection" was then an important part of an American editor's duties; in England it was characterized by a less agreeable phrase. A few years sufficed, however, to change the aspect of affairs. The number of American authors capable of supplying magazinable matter rapidly increased, and their productions gradually took the place of the foreign selections. It is now many years since American editors relied for their most interesting matter upon the pages of English and French periodicals. As an example of the thoroughness of this emancipation, we may state that the greater part of the reading matter of Harper's Magazine is from the pens of native authors, only about twenty-five pages out of the 150 composing each number being supplied from abroad. This portion is generally in the form of serial stories, which are in all cases purchased from the authors or their representatives at liberal prices. The magazine is thus entirely made up of original matter, while the great preponderance of native writing in its pages gives it a claim to rank among the foremost representatives of a very important branch of American literature.

It was the design of the founders of this magazine to make it the vehicle of literary instruction and amusement for the mass of American readers; and its success is in great part owing, no doubt, to the constancy with which this end has been kept in view by those who have been intrusted with its management. Holding a position of its own in periodical literature, it always furnishes the sort of reading required by men of average culture and education. The great variety of its contents is another element of popularity. One class of readers is attracted by the illustrated articles of information, travel and adventure; another by the shorter stories, of which each number always contains several; others are especially interested in the genial chat of the "Easy Chair;" others in the wit and humor of the "Editor's Drawer;" and others again in the "Scientific Record." For those who delight in pictures, each number of the magazine contains four illustrated sheets, of sixty-four pages. These are printed slowly, and with great care, and are sent to press at least three months before their appearance in the magazine. The circulation of Harper's Magazine is now, we learn, over 130,000 per month. Each number contains 160 pages and 165,000 words. The paper for each monthly edition weighs thirty-two and one-half tons. The cost of the engravings for each number is, on an average, $2,500; that of the literary work, aside from regular salaries, about $9,000.

The first number of Harper's Weekly was issued on the first of January, 1857. Originally intended to be a pictorial record of noteworthy events occurring in every part of the world, as well as a popular medium of popular information and amusement, it has become, without losing these features, a very powerful organ of political opinion. Its leading articles on domestic and foreign questions and political events are distinguished by weight of argument and force of style, while never offensive in tone nor transcending the limits of cultivated journalism. The plan on which it is conducted necessitates the reliance upon foreign sources for the illustration of events occurring in Europe and other parts of the Old World, although original sketches, sent from abroad, are frequently engraved for its pages; and some of the best pictures it has given have been from the pencils of American artists. Among these we may mention the powerful political cartoons of Mr. NAST, to which we have frequently called the attention of our readers, and which, for several years, have been a prominent feature in the paper.

The circulation of Harper's Weekly averages 120,000 per week, and it has sometimes, during periods of great excitement, reached the enormous figure of 280,000. To supply its regular edition fifteen tons of white paper are consumed every week, or 750 tons per annum. The average weekly cost of engraving is $600, or $30,000 per annum, and the cost of drawing on the block is about the same, exclusive of the salaries of artists regularly attached to the office.

The third and latest of the periodicals published by the HARPERS, the Bazar, was suggested by a stray number of the Berlin fashion paper of the same name which accidentally fell under their notice. Harper's Bazar is, however, nearly double the size of its German prototype, and is more richly illustrated. It is exclusively a journal for family reading, and politics never intrude upon its columns. The circulation of this paper is 100,000 per week. The weight of paper used every week is 12½ tons, or 650 tons per annum. Among the pleasant features of the Bazar is a series of social essays from the pen of Mr. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, under the general heading of "Manners Upon the Road," which treat of many topics of social interest in the graceful and agreeable style, and with the apt facility of illustration, which are so characteristic of the "Easy Chair."

The HARPERS may well be proud of their periodicals, upon which the reading public of America has so emphatically set the seal of its approval; and though it would be easy to criticise, and suggest changes, as for example, in the matter of the shorter magazine stories, which too often fall below the standard of the English, and in regard to the transfer of so many English engravings to the Weekly, to the exclusion of original illustrations,—it must still be acknowledged that all three are managed with admirable skill, and fully deserve their wide-spread popularity.

"Our Dumb Animals"—Work Laid Out for the Illinois Humane Society—Mr. Angell's Plan.

From the Chicago Tribune, Jan. 23.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Illinois Humane Society, held at No. 154 Washington-street, on Saturday afternoon last, GEO. T. ANGELL, Esq., President of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, submitted to the Directors the following proposed plan of operations for the Illinois Society:

PLAN OF OPERATIONS.

1. Rent an office, where complaints may be entered, &c. Employ an able man as Secretary with a clerk, and one or two officers to investigate and prosecute complaints. Judging from the experience of the Massachusetts Society, I should say that probably about 1,000 complaints of cruelties in the city and at the stock yards would have to be investigated in the course of the first year, and perhaps 100 of them prosecuted. The Secretary would have to get the Society incorporated; procure some amendments to the law; appoint an agent or two in each county to look after its enforcement, and perhaps 100 Vice-Presidents (as the Massachusetts Society had done,) to represent the Society in different parts of the State.

2. Attempt to have all abandoned animals taken care of or killed, and the stray, starving dogs carried to some place, kept for a few days for owners, then sold or given away, or killed with carbonic acid gas, as in Philadelphia.

3. Petition for watering troughs for animals like those in Eastern cities.

4. Induce men (if possible) to stand at bridges, tunnels, &c., with spare horses, to assist heavily-loaded teams for a small compensation.

5. Get more stringent laws for the inspection of meats sold in the city.

6. Show railway companies that they can make more money by altering their cattle cars so as to carry a less number to a car, without cruelty; and show shippers that the shrinkage saved will much more than pay the increased price of transportation.

7. Show that the treatment of calves in bleeding and transportation injures their meat, and get the practice changed.

8. Show horse-car companies that the present system of ever-loading is unprofitable to stockholders, and how it can be improved by adopting a system practiced in Europe.

9. Gradually diminish and abate a great variety of cruelties to animals now practiced, and which it would require considerable space and time to enumerate.

ITS EDUCATIONAL WORK.

1. Print, once a month, a small paper, like that of the Massachusetts society, filled principally with interesting humane stories and literature designed for the children; but containing matter suited for the Press, clergy, and educational men, and other matter suited for distribution among people having to do with dumb animals; this paper to be sent to all members of the society, children included, to the clergy, Press, educational men, magistrates, members of the Legislature, teachers, teachers' conventions, and subscribers generally, including in the latter class, so far as possible, Sunday and other schools.

2. Print, annually, large card almanacs, as they do in England, containing humane cuts and teachings, to be put up in school-houses, railway depots, etc.

3. Give prizes (as they do in England) annually, to the pupil in each advanced school who shall write the best essay on humane subjects, and have the prize essays read in the schools.

4. Give, at the annual meeting, other prizes and medals (as they do in France) to persons who, during the year shall have performed distinguished acts of humanity.

5. Arrange to have the best humane literature put in school reading books, and humane songs in school singing books.

6. Get an act of the Legislature, making it the duty of teachers to give humane instruction in the schools.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

SUNDAY EDITION.

The Sunday edition of the daily NEW-YORK TIMES is now the best family paper, and the most attractive to the general reader, published in the City.

It contains all the foreign and domestic news of the day in an intelligent form, and without being "padded out" by sensational head lines, and comments introduced in New-York.

It gives a full and complete summary of European news received by the latest mails, and carefully prepared for this paper.

The most interesting topics in the weekly exchanges are described in the "Notes and Comments," which have for some time been a special feature of the journal.

There is always at least one attractive story in each issue, and very often two, besides copious LITERARY SELECTIONS, from

A VETERAN ABOLITIONIST.

The Late Thomas Garrett, of Delaware—Devotion of His Life to the Anti-Slavery Cause—Reported Aid to Runaway Slaves.

The Wilmington (Del.) Commercial gives a long and interesting sketch of the life of THOS. GARRETT, the veteran Abolitionist, who, as already stated in the TIMES, died in that city on Wednesday, at the age of eighty-one. The Commercial says that on Tuesday he was found to be sinking very rapidly. Just before midnight, he commenced to speak, and some of those in attendance went close to his bed-side. He was evidently in some pain, and said: "It is all peace, peace, peace, but no rest this side of the river." He then breathed calmly on for some time. About half an hour later, one of those in attendance ceased to hear his breathing, and, bending over him, found that his soul had fled. He retained a good deal of his strength through his illness, and was able to get up from his bed every day with the assistance of one person. From the sketch we quote further, as follows:

His business career was one of vindictude, but generally and ultimately successful, for he made the whole of the comfortable competence of which he died possessed after he was sixty years of age. While in the beginning of his business career as an iron merchant in this city, a wealthy rival house attempted to crush him, by reducing prices of iron to cost, but Mr. GARRETT, nothing dismayed, employed another person to attend his store, put on his leather apron, took to his anvil, and, in the prosecution of his trade as an edge-tool maker, prepared to support himself as long as this rumous rivalry was kept up. His competitor saw that no amount of rivalry could crush a man thus self-supporting, and gave up the effort.

Of course, THOMAS GARRETT is best known for his labors in behalf of the abolition of slavery, and as a practical and effective worker for emancipation, long before the nation commenced its efforts for the cause of liberation and freedom. Being a Quaker, he held with simple trust the faith of the Society, and never wavered in his conviction that his Father had called him to work in the cause to which he devoted himself. His attention was first directed to the iniquity of slavery while a young man of twenty-four or twenty-five. He returned one day to his father's house, after a brief absence, and found the family dismayed and indignant at the kidnapping of a colored woman in their employ. THOMAS immediately resolved to follow the kidnappers, and started in pursuit. He found them, and, we believe, secured the woman's release. During this ride, as he afterward assured his friends, he felt the iniquity and abomination of slavery borne in upon his mind so strongly as to appal him, and from this time forward he never failed to assist any fugitive from slavery who came to his residence. In course of time his house became known as one of the refuges for fugitives. The sentiment of this community was at that time bitterly averse to any word or effort against slavery, and Mr. GARRETT had but half a dozen friends who stood by him. He continued his labors for years, helping all who came to him, and making no concealment of his readiness to do so. His firmness and courage slowly won others, first to admire and then to assist him, and the little band of faithful workers, of which he was chief, gradually enlarged and included in its number men of all creeds and different grades, and sinners, as it may seem, even numbering some ardent Democrats in its ranks. He has, in conversation with the present writer and others, frequently acknowledged the valuable services of two Roman Catholics, of Irish birth, still living in this city, who were ever faithful to him, and will long survive those who most earnestly mourn his decease.

His efforts, of course, brought him much persecution and annoyance, but never culminated in anything really serious, until about the year 1848 or 1847. He then met, as New-Castle, a man, woman, and six children, from down on the Western Shore of Maryland. The man was free, the woman had been a slave, and while in slavery had had by her husband two children. She was then set free, and afterward had four children. The whole party ran away. They traveled several days, and finally reached Mid-town, late at night, where they were taken in, fed, and cared for by JOHN HUNN, a wealthy Quaker. They were watched, however, by some persons in that section, who followed them, arrested them, and sent them to New-Castle, to jail. The Sheriff and his daughter were anti-slavery people, and wrote to Mr. GARRETT to come over. He went over, had an interview, found from their statement that the facts were undoubtedly free, and returned to this city. On the following day, he and United States Senator WILMS went over and had the party taken before Judge BOOTH, on a writ of habeas corpus. Judge BOOTH decided that there was no evidence on which to hold them, and, in the absence of evidence the presumption was always in favor of freedom, and discharged them.

Mr. GARRETT then said, here is this woman with a babe at her breast, the child suffering from a white swelling on its leg, is there any impropriety in my getting a carriage and helping them over to Wilmington? Judge BOOTH responded certainly not. Mr. GARRETT then hired the carriage, but gave the driver distinctly to understand that he only paid for the woman and the young children, the rest might walk. They all got in, however, and finally escaped, of course the two children born in slavery among the rest.

Six weeks afterward the slaveholders followed them, and incited, it is said, by the COCHRANS and JAS. A. BAYARD, commenced a suit against Mr. GARRETT, claiming all the fugitives as slaves. Mr. GARRETT's friends claim that the witnesses were packed to secure an adverse verdict. The trial came on before Chief-Justice TANEY and Judge HALL, in the May term (1849) of the United States Court, sitting at New-Castle, BAYARD representing the prosecutors, and WALES the defendant. There were four trials in all, lasting three days. The jurors awarded even heavier damages than the plaintiffs claimed, and the judgments swept away every dollar of his property.

When the trials were concluded Mr. GARRETT arose, the Court being adjourned, made a speech of an hour to the large crowd in the Court-room, in response of which he declared his intention to redouble his exertions, now he was poor. His bold assertion was greeted with mingled cheers and hisses, and as the conclusion of his speech one of the jurors who had convicted him strode across the benches, grasped his hand and begged his forgiveness.

Mr. GARRETT kept his pledge, and redoubled his exertions. The trial advertised him, and such was the demand on him for shelter that he was compelled to put another story on his back buildings. His friends helped him to start again in business, and commencing anew in his sixty-fifth year with nothing, he again amassed a handsome competence, generously aiding all the while to every work in behalf of the down-trodden blacks or his suffering fellow-men of any color.

In time the war came, and, as he remarked, the nation went into the business by the whole-sale—which was not the case with retail operations, having, after he commenced to keep a record, helped off over 2,700 slaves, and no inconsiderable number before that time. In time, too, he came to be honored instead of execrated for his noble efforts. Wilmington became an abolition city, and for once at least a prophet was not without honor in his own city. Mr. GARRETT continued his interest in every reform up to his lastfulness, and probably his last appearance in any public capacity, was as President of a woman suffrage meeting, in the City Hall, a few months ago, which was addressed by JULIA WARD HOWE, LUCY STONE and HENRY B. BLACKWELL.

He lived to see the realization of his hopes for universal freedom, and in April last, on the occasion of the great parade of the colored people in this city, he was carried through our streets in an open barouche, surrounded by the men in whose behalf he had labored so faithfully, and the guards around his carriage carrying banners with the inscription "Our Moses." He was beloved almost to adoration by his dusky-hued friends, and in the dark days of the beginning of the war, which every Willmingtonian will remember with a shudder, in those days of doubt, confusion and suspicion, without his knowledge or consent, THOMAS GARRETT's house was constantly surrounded and watched by faithful black men, resolved that, come weal come woe to them, no harm should come to the benefactor of their race.

Further About the Cold Weather in Canada and its Effects.

From the Quebec Mercury, Jan. 23.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that today the weather has been colder than that experienced for the last ten years. At Mount Pleasant, at 7 o'clock, with a keen northerly wind blowing, the thermometer stood at 42° below zero, while at the Citadel at the same hour it fell as low as 46°, at Cataraqui 30°, at Hamwood, St. Foy, to 40°. During the day it fluctuated between 24° and 28° below. The wind has veered round to the south since noon, so that some slight change at least may be looked for. Yesterday at noon the thermometer was about 12° below zero, but the cold was very severe owing to the keen north wind, and fell to 16° below zero at 6 o'clock in the evening, at the General Hospital. It was impossible today, from the lower part of the city, to distinguish anything on the other side of the river, on account of the dense vapor arising from the water, but the steamers ran as usual.

In the midst of this intense cold we find most people moving about as usual, and many even susceptible of Summer's changes, do not seem much incommoded by today's frosty but clear, bright sunny weather. The first ladies were met in a dense street, and one of these ladies devoted to charity's errands, made even a more extended tour than usual among the abodes of the poor, the cold and the hungry. School-boys going across the high lands got their ears, noses and cheeks frozen, and will no doubt long remember the day. The plank board roofs on the house tops, and the planking on galleries and sidewalks were shrinking hard during the night, and the bursting sounder of their ivy coverings produced many loud reports during the darkness, and are marked by the usual crevices noticeable in daylight by pedestrians on the streets.

Owing to the proximity of the River St. Lawrence, the temperature in the city does not so low as it does a mile or more inland, so that our records do not likely give the lowest degree yet reached.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Fifty Thousand Dollar Gift of Mr. Tweed and His Statue.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As there is much being said and published about the munificent gift of fifty thousand dollars by Mr. TWEED, and the statue of him which it is proposed to erect, I would like to say a word regarding both in your valuable paper.

Very many good men doubt if that sum has actually been given bona fide to the poor, as represented. But, if it has, we all know that it has been given from political motives, and not from any feelings of sympathy for the poor, beyond a political sense. We all know how Mr. TWEED came to have so much money to give away, and I would suggest that he constitute Messrs. ROBERTS, ASTOR and others of his "whitewashing committee" a committee, place in their hands nine millions nine hundred thousand dollars of the ten millions he is said to be worth, and empower them to pay such money back to those taxpayers who have rooted his tax bills for the last ten years, in proportion to the tax each has paid. In this way the poor would be greatly benefited and many thousands of our tax payers would get what belongs to them.

As to his statue, I am in favor of having it placed in the Central Park. I want it there for the benefit of future generations. It is very important for those having sons growing up that that they should be taught to respect the laws and frown upon every man in public life who commits, as Mr. TWEED has, offenses of the gravest character. And as he has done more to corrupt our politics than any man who has ever lived in this country, has become rich from public plunder, it is fitting and just that his statue should occupy a conspicuous place in our City, that we may take our sons by the hand, lead them before the image of this man, and say to them: "This is the man whose life has been one of corruption and crime; who has done worst set of men who have ever governed in any civil capacity; tell them that this man and his band were greater enemies of our Government than BENEDICT ARNOLD or JEFF. DAVIS, and warn them that to live such lives is to become branded as of every honest man in the community." By all means let his statue be erected, for there will be a grand moral in it.

ANTI-TWEED.

Street Openings.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Perhaps I can answer "M." who asks for light as to the Park-place extension.

The lots within 100 feet of Park-place are assessed for this improvement at a greater rate than those more distant. Hence, No. 233 Broadway is assessed almost twice as much as No. 235. The principle of assessing property benefited by a street opening, is to graduate the charge according to the relative distance of the premises from the line of the improvement.

It is evident to those who have studied this Park-place extension, that it is an improvement desired by nobody interested, except two or three wealthy land-owners holding the fee of two blocks on Robinson-street, and that your correspondent and others are deeply aggrieved by the assessments in this matter.

I would suggest that there is an ample remedy. The Commissioners have not yet presented their report for confirmation, but propose so to do on Tuesday next. If the parties aggrieved be on hand at Judge CARDOZO's Court-room at 2½ on that day, they may protect themselves through counsel. If not, they cannot fairly complain of injustice. The property-owners interested have been singularly apathetic; it is a pity, as the proceedings should be closely and thoroughly watched.

Yours respectfully, A CITIZEN.

Central and Hudson Stock.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Have you Mr. HOPKINS HATON's [illegible] stock, I want to see that [illegible] Pennsylvania Railroad stock, which is a link of the Central and Hudson; he has put all the funds into Central stock and bonds, and the present value of his investment is about $250,000. He put $10,000 at the same time into real estate, and has supported his family from the income of these. The real estate now is worth over $50,000, he is thus fairly entitled to the advance belong it not? [illegible] farmer will buy a farm that has had a tenant at a low price, and put it in order and double its productions, and sell it for treble its original cost. Now Mr. VANDERBILT has put Central and Hudson in order, and he don't want to sell, and the stockholders are satisfied with the results. G. J. A.

THE TOMBS OF EX-PRESIDENTS.

A Proposition Respecting the Hermitage in the Tennessee Legislature.

From the Nashville Union and American, Jan. 24.

A bill pending in the House of Representatives authorizing the Governor to sell certain real estate belonging to the State, including the Hermitage property, at the instance of Mr. FLEMING, of Knox, was amended, so as to except the Hermitage Homestead, and 200 acres of land surrounding and contiguous thereto. The amendment also donates the excepted grounds to Mrs. ANDREW JACKSON, Jr., for her natural life, and at her death vests it in the State in fee simple. If the bill is passed, we trust this provision will be retained in it, and that Mrs. JACKSON will not be disturbed, during her life, in the peaceful occupation of a home in which centre all her affections, and around which cluster all the dear memories of her heart, both of joy and sorrow. As the adopted child of the old hero, it was hers in youth; and now, in age and widowhood, it would be worse than cruel to turn her forth, and place the tomb of ANDREW JACKSON and the graves of her husband and children in the possession of strangers. Every feeling of admiration of the dead and sympathy for the living would protest against such an act. If the State needs money, it does not need it to that extent; for no money could atone for such heartlessness. Besides, the land thus excepted from sale will be worth more to the State at the death of Mrs. JACKSON than it could possibly realize now.

The proposition of Mr. FLEMING should be the unanimous voice of the General Assembly, and the survivor of a house that has shed so much lustre on the American name and character should be left to dress the mounds, and cherish the ashes of the dead in peace.

The Grave of William Henry Harrison—Description of its Surroundings.

From the Cleveland Herald, Jan. 24.

In the Legislature of this State a few days since Mr. YEATMAN, of Hamilton, introduced a bill providing for the accepting of a deed of the land which contains the tomb of Gen. WILLIAM H. HARRISON, and for improving and beautifying the same. A short description of the place and its surroundings may therefore be of interest, especially to those who have never visited the spot.

North Bend is in the extreme south-western corner of Ohio, being merely a flag and coaling station, where the Ohio and Mississippi and the Indianapolis and Lafayette Railroads diverge. It is sixteen miles from Cincinnati, and three miles from the Indiana line. The old homestead of Gen. HARRISON is quite near the station-house. Thence he was called to the State Legislature, and by an overwhelming majority to the Presidential chair. The career of the hero of Tippecanoe and the Thames needs no mention here. His reputation is not local but national, and the great West owes an immense debt of gratitude to the defender of its borders. And how have these obligations been fulfilled? Across the railroads already mentioned and about one-fourth of a mile from the homestead, is a knoll that rises perhaps one hundred feet above the river. This was, for many years, the General's choice as his last resting-place. The view from the summit is a grand one. At your feet is the Ohio—the beautiful river—which here makes a double bend, and can be seen for miles in either direction. Upon the other side of the knoll can be traced in the distance the course of the Miami before it enters the Ohio four miles below. Almost upon the summit of this knoll is the vault that contains all that is mortal of Gen. HARRISON. It is of plain brick, with a rough board door, and is covered with turf and weeds. Such is the resting-place of the only President Ohio ever gave to the nation. As seen from the river the tomb presents a striking appearance, even in its rude state. It is to be hoped the present effort will be successful, and that a more fitting memorial will adorn the last resting-place of the worthy hero.

Death of an Eminent Texas Statesman and Patriot.

From the San Antonio Herald, Jan. 15.

It is with profound regret that we announce the death of Don JOSE ANTONIO NAVARRO, the venerable citizen, the revered patriot, and the honest man, who expired at his residence in this city, on yesterday (Saturday) morning, 14th inst., at 1¼ o'clock, aged seventy-six years.

To none of her greatest statesmen, nor to her many eminent patriots, is Texas more indebted for her existence as a Republic, than Don JOSE ANTONIO NAVARRO, who ever retiring in his manners, but ever firm and unflinching, and always honest, unselfish and unswerving in his devotion to the course of Texan independence, proved in his support a tower of strength. He lived and died a thorough and consistent Democrat, a noble exemplar, who, though gathered to his fathers in the fullness of age, yet his death has caused the deepest sorrow throughout the community, and his memory will be cherished with the fondest regard.

THE LAST OF "COUNT JOHANNES."

The Sequel to His Story About the Nathan Murder—Alleged Attempt at Conspiracy—Jeopardizing a Man's Life for the $40,000 Reward—Motion to Discharge the Offender.

The sensation caused by the sentence of WOLFF, the child-murderer, yesterday, at the Court of General Sessions, before Judge BARTLETT, had no sooner subsided, than fresh excitement, by the denouement of an alleged conspiracy on the part of lawyer JONES in connection with his recent silly canard about the discovery of the NATHAN murderer. The man whom he accused of the crime was JAMES HUGHES, who was arrested a short time ago on a charge of larceny of money and for whom he claimed to act as counsel. The Grand Jury, when they came to examine lawyer JONES' charges threw them aside as so much "rot." On being called to the bar of the Court, yesterday, HUGHES entered a plea of guilty to the indictment against him, after which Mr. MCCLELLAND, his counsel, proceeded to read the following remarkable affidavit:

DETAILS OF THE ALLEGED CONSPIRACY.

The People vs. JAMES HUGHES.—City and County of New-York, ss: ALBERT F. CRAIG, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is acquainted with JAS. HUGHES, the defendant herein; that said acquaintance commenced on the 24th day of January, 1871, in the City Prison of this City, wherein this deponent and the said HUGHES were then and are now confined; that this deponent is well acquainted with an individual named E. G. HOWE, who was confined in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island, where this deponent was also confined from May 21 until Dec. 10, 1870; that this deponent is acquainted with an individual calling and styling himself "George the Count Johannes," whose name, as deponent has been informed and believes, is plain GEORGE JONES, from the fact that he has seen the said GEORGE JONES in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island in company with the said E. G. HOWE, and conversing with him (HOWE) in the month of September, 1870; further, this deponent says that he saw the said GEORGE JONES, alias "George the Count Johannes," engaged in conversation with the said E. G. HOWE on divers and different occasions in said Penitentiary; that the said HOWE made a confidant of this deponent, and the said HOWE intended, upon their release, to proceed together to California. That the said E. G. HOWE informed the party he held to be his frequent conversations and conferences with the said GEORGE JONES, alias "George the Count Johannes." That the said HOWE told this deponent that he (E. G. HOWE) and the said "Count Johannes" were "putting up a job," to use his language, to secure the large reward of $40,000 which had been offered by the authorities for the arrest and conviction of the murderer of BENJAMIN NATHAN. That the said E. G. HOWE further informed this deponent that he had told the said "Count" that he (HOWE) could furnish proofs which would fasten the crime upon one JAMES HUGHES, (with whom he, HOWE, had quarreled shortly before,) and notwithstanding he knew and was convinced of the falsity of the statement he had made to the said [illegible] be secured. That the said HOWE [illegible] and this deponent that the said "Count" [illegible] told him (HOWE) that if he, the said HOWE, would stand by what he had said, that it would be an easy matter to convict the said HUGHES of the murder of Mr. NATHAN, owing to the excited condition of the public mind about this terrible tragedy, and thus secure the reward offered, which was to be divided between the said HOWE and the "Count." That this deponent remonstrated with the said HOWE about the enormity of such a frightful conspiracy, when the said HOWE coolly informed this deponent that he (HOWE) and the said "Count" would do anything for money, and in order to secure the said reward.

Deponent further says that the said HOWE and the aforementioned "Count" had kept a clandestine correspondence until the release of this deponent, as he was informed by the said HOWE, and that on his deponent's discharge from said Penitentiary in consequence of the expiration of his term of imprisonment, deponent was arrested on suspicion of arson, and the case is under investigation by Fire-Marshal MCSPEDON. GERSHAL explains the fact of the stock being all upon one floor by saying that he had removed it there to make room for new stock he was about to receive. Another singular circumstance of the disaster is that the building, which is owned by MORGAN JONES, was insured only to the extent of $100.

A FAMILY FEUD.

A Writ of Ne Exeat in the Case of Heath and Hughes Issued by the Supreme Court—A Quarrel About Some Madison-Avenue Property.

An application was made yesterday before Judge SUTHERLAND, sitting at the Chambers of the Supreme Court, on the affidavits of Mrs. MARY E. HUGHES and her husband, THOS. W. B. HUGHES, for a writ of ne exeat to be issued against MRS. HEATH, the mother of the former. The circumstances of this case are somewhat peculiar. A suit was brought some time ago, (as reported at the time in these columns,) in the equity branch of this Court by MRS. HUGHES and her husband against MRS. MARY M. HEATH and her husband, ASHAEL HEATH, for the purpose of compelling the defendants to convey to MRS. HUGHES the house and lot known as No. 312 Madison-avenue, which is now valued at $40,000. The wife of Mr. HUGHES is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. HEATH, and Mr. HEATH and Mr. HUGHES were for a time copartners, doing business in this City as brokers. For a reason satisfactory to himself, Mr. HUGHES conveyed the property, No. 312 Madison-avenue, some years ago, to his mother-in-law, MRS. HEATH, with the understanding that the same was to be re-conveyed to the daughter, MRS. HUGHES. The latter conveyance not having been made, an action was brought to compel it. The case was tried in October last, before Judge BARNARD, at Special Term, a full report of which appeared in the TIMES. Judge BARNARD has given no decision as yet, but some of the parties believe that they have knowledge as to what the judgment of the Court will be. Mr. HEATH, the father-in-law, and Mr. HUGHES, the son-in-law, while doing business together, had in very serious quarrel. Hence it is thus Mr. HEATH will not consent to a reconveyance of the Madison-avenue property to his daughter MARY. The affidavits show that the old gentleman says that before he will consent to a reconveyance he will expend all the property of which he is possessed. He insists that his son-in-law has wronged him out of a large sum, and he will not compromise the affair in any way. Mr. HEATH purchased a ticket for his wife for the steamer Alepno, which was to sail from this port yesterday for Europe, with the view, as the Hughes party say, of avoiding the order of the Court, which it was supposed would compel MRS. HEATH to reconvey the property to her daughter. Hence the application for a writ of ne exeat to prevent her from leaving the country. Judge SUTHERLAND granted the writ and directed the party to be held to bail in $40,000. Mrs. Heath states that she has been acting under the compulsion of her husband, and that it was her wish that the property should be reconveyed to the daughter.

City Mission—A Month's Good Work.

On Monday evening the City Mission held its monthly meeting in the First Presbyterian Church, Fifth-avenue and Twelfth-street. Statements were made by several of the missionaries showing the happy results of their beneficent labors in the reclamation of drunkards, in gathering children under instruction, in opening missions for strangers, seamen, wayfarers, &c. Mr. LEWIS E. JACKSON, Corresponding Secretary, adverted to the early history of church and mission work in New-York, and the support the City Mission had always received from the First church, and gave a general view of the operations of the Society for the month. Rev. GEORGE I. MINGINS spoke of the City Mission as the picket-guard of the army of Christ, looking after the guerrillas and bushwhackers, and illustrated how by kindness and tact the hardest may be won. Rev. Dr. PAXTON, pastor of the church, said: I must add a few words of commendation to this very important cause. Do not let our familiarity with the facts of the vice and poverty and crime of our City, deaden our sensibilities, or lead us to relax our efforts as hopeless. I am satisfied that love is an agency admirably qualified to deal with this grave subject. There is no one among us that is not deeply interested in the welfare of our City, and there should be no lack of means for sustaining and enlarging a Society that is accomplishing such a vast amount of good. I rejoice in this visit of the City Mission to our church, and I am always ready to do all I can to further its interests. I think the annual report, proposed by the Secretary, is a most valuable document, and should be read by every one who would be informed of Christian work in New-York. Among the figures of the month's work we note as follows: 40 missionaries, making 11,864 visits; 7 Mission chapels, in which are held 500 services; 4 Mission Sunday-schools, caring for 1,200 children; 5 Temperance Societies and 4,000 members; 2 lodging-houses and reading-rooms, giving 2,000 lodgings and meals, and having 500 readers; 200 families and 1,000 persons aided and $500 cash distributed, beside clothing, fuel and food.

The Fenian War Equipments—Another Heavy Verdict in Favor at the Shippers.

In the case of HERMAN FUNKE vs. The New-York Mutual Insurance Company, tried before Judge FREEDMAN in the Superior Court, a verdict was rendered by the jury yesterday in favor of the plaintiff for $14,155 50. This is the last of the numerous cases arising out of the loss of the Samuel T. Keys, on a voyage to Mexico, loaded with war equipments, a large portion of which was purchased from the officers of the Fenian organization, and all of which cases, except one, were decided in favor of the plaintiffs.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The severe storm of yesterday (Jan. 26) seriously interrupted all classes of business, and real estate, in common with the others, experienced the effect. The Exchange, in consequence, was but slimly attended, and but little business was transacted. The executor's sale of property belonging to the Cipriani estate, which was advertised to take place, was adjourned by the auctioneers, E. H. LUDLOW & Co., until Thursday next, the 2d prox., this course being deemed judicious, although most of those present were in attendance on account of this auction. Messrs. LUDLOW & Co. also postponed the sale of the Reade-street property, No. 141, also announced to be made, until the same day of the Cipriani auction.

Notwithstanding the storm, MULLER, WILKINS & CO. proceeded with their executor's sale, comprising property located on Sixth-avenue and West Fourteenth-street respectively, belonging to the estate of JOHN MANSFIELD, deceased. The following is the result of the transaction: Four-story high-stoop brick house and lot located on the south side of Fourteenth-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, known as No. 48, lot 25x103.3; sold to H. HENRIQUES for $39,000. Three-story brick house and lot situated on the east side of Sixth-avenue, between Waverley-place and Eighth-street, known as No. 60, lot 22.9x80; sold to J. D. LEWIS for $18,600. The last-named house is leased until May 1, 1874, at the rental of $1,700 per annum. The prices realized are low, and the property would undoubtedly have brought higher figures, had a larger number of persons been present at the sale. Nothing further of interest occurred at the Exchange. For today one or two legal sales are noticed, but it is not probable that much additional business will be transacted during the week.

At private sale, new lots of desirable City property are advertised by STANLEY DAY, No. 111 Broadway, and by ALLEN & BROWN, No. 96 Broadway; by BLACKWELL & MARKS, No. 95 Liberty-street, offer several valuable tracts of land at Yonkers, in Westchester County, and Mr. DAY also calls attention to a large lot of suburban property, all eligibly located, which he offers at reasonable figures.

BALLS LAST NIGHT.

FOR THE FRENCH SUFFERERS.

Ball of the Cercle Francais de l'Harmonie.

The Academy of Music, freshly decorated, brilliantly lighted, and vocal with the strains of an excellent orchestra, was occupied, last evening, by the Cercle Francais de l'Harmonie and its friends. Although it is doubtful if all the well-wishers of the Cercle were there, yet the fact, which was plain to the eye, that the entire place was occupied, contributed not a little to make a brilliant and picturesque scene to the looker-on from the boxes, and a delightful pastime of dances, promenades and chats to the active participants in the sport. The music, we have said, was capital, and the order of dancing was prepared, not in accordance with the style of things at a recent ball, where four "square dances" were provided for the elderly people who could not share the twenty round, but as the variety which even a dancing-order can be endowed with ought to possess. There was an abundance of fresh costumes, and no scarcity, of course, of faded narcissus. The effect of the continued reign of opera bonnets were not observable in many dresses suggested by the repertory, although one or two Fiorellas, who, to the frequenter of the theatre, need no introduction as "Ia Mlle du bandit," were discernibly among the familiar facies and figures. Of recognizable counterances, there was the usual representation. Politics, the Judiciary, the Bar, the Stage, the Press, and those lower estates whose members are principally conspicuous for long hair and long coats, were present, as they are on all similar occasions. But there was no check of the elements of the ball from its beginning to its close, and while there was plenty of animation and gaiety, decorum and, better still, the harmony, so prominent a part of the Society's name, was fairly maintained. The first ball of the Cercle, in time, did it fully the credit earlier occasions have borne it, and if all the persons concerned cannot, for lack of space, be hailed as worthy the gratitude of their guests, an experienced and affable Comité d'Organisation, composed of MM. A. Bailliard, P. Arnaud, A. Fouquet, H. Lefebvre, E. Lemaître, L. Hackmann, E. Chabot and J. Blanc, is to be referred to for explanation of any seeming neglect, resulting in a very agreeable entertainment.

HEAVY MEN'S BALL.

First Annual Ball of the United Association of Heavy Men of the State of New-York.

While the French ball last evening was enveloping all Fourteenth-street in a blinding blaze of artificial light without the Academy of Music, and with a voluminous blaze of beauty within, the less pretentious Irving Hall, directly opposite, presented a scene quite equal in merriment and beauty, and certainly far surpassing it in certain solid attributes. Since the time last year when the fat men and women in the land conspired to sink the floor of the same hall, and thus nearly ruin the city by their building the united obesity of America, no such sight has hitherto been witnessed on those time-honored boards as was there presented last evening. On the present occasion, however, instead of slow-moving and almost helpless corpulency, there was present a company of men solid in muscle, solid in pocket, solid in social position and business worth, and of the refined, the amiable and the fair of the opposite sex. To be more explicit, the occasion was that of the first annual ball of the "United Association of Heavy Men of the State of New-York." The gentlemen present representing almost every substantial business interest of the City, from the professional man all through the list of dry-goods merchants, grocers, hatters, tailors, wholesale butchers, the kings of the oyster and fish trade, members of the Corn Exchange, as well as representatives of Wall-street. The following names are gathered from the members of the respective committees on the occasion:

Reception Committee.—C. C. Hall, Chairman; W. W. Vanderbilt, S. Griffith, John Green, John E. Iselin, Jas. E. George, Elisha Weston, Isaac S. Moran, W. C. Dodge, Edward Knightly, Jas. F. Gilsey, Robert H. Tuthill, Alonzo Taylor, Charles Fox, M. A. Finnell, F. D. Bristed, H. W. Henley, Henry O. Pope, George Washburn, T. Montgomery, R. Miller, J. Edgar Thomson, R. H. Ballard, S. Kneeland, Jas. Beatty, Dearborn G. Piper, Joseph Hall, Floor Manager, James Moffet, Floor Committee—D. M. Fifield, J. J. Comnat, A. T. Dennis, Alfred Dorlon, Spencer Kellogg, Jr., Leander Sartor, William L. Dennis, R. D. White, W. H. Kirby, Frank A. Hanson, President. James Moffet, Secretary.

At 9 o'clock the company began to arrive, and about 10 Grafulla's Band, which had been previously entertaining those present with agreeable music, struck up the strain for the dance, and the real work of the evening began. Among those noticeable on the floor and on the promenade were M. A. Finnell, accompanied by Mrs. Dr. T. C. Finnell and Miss Cheney; the President, Mr. Frank A. Hanson, accompanied by Mrs. Hanson and Mrs. Newell from the West; Mr. P. J. Bogart, with his lady and daughter, Miss Meme Bogart; Mr. Timothy J. Coe, with his lady and daughter, Miss Katie Coe; Mr. D. M. Fifield, lady and daughter, Miss Fanny Fifield; Mr. J. J. Comnat and lady; Mr. T. Montgomery and lady, of Brooklyn; Mr. W. W. Vanderbilt and family; Mr. Alonzo Taylor, who was married shortly by a perfect cloud of beauty; Mr. T. Dennis and lady, and Mr. Moffet, the courteous and efficient floor manager, on whose arm leaned the blonde beauty, Miss Coe. Dancing was kept up with much energy until about midnight, when it was temporarily interrupted in order to allow the guests an opportunity to refresh themselves at the supper-table, after which it was resumed and continued far into the early morning. Among the officers noticeable for their unremitting and courteous attention to the guests were Dr. M. A. Finnell, John Green and T. Montgomery, of the Reception Committee; Mr. Jas. Moffet, the Floor Manager; Mr. Frank A. Hanson, the President; and Mr. T. J. Coe, of the Floor Committee. The whole affair, which was marked by good order and respectability, reflected credit both on the managers and the large company present.

The Girls' Lodging-House—Shelter and Rest for the Unfortunate.

The Girls' Lodging-house, under the patronage of the Children's Aid Society, and presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Eli Trot, was first started on a permanent footing in the building, No. 62 Canal-street, May 1, 1862. The institution was removed to the present location, No. 26 Bleecker-street, in May, 1866. An average of about thirty-five lodgers are accommodated during the year. Its doors are opened to distressed women of all kinds, whether rendered homeless by misfortune or sin; all alike are welcome to shelter. Those who have the money to pay, are able to work in lieu thereof, are charged ten cents per night, for grown persons, six cents per night for children under 12, or per week. The charge for children's lodging is six cents per night or one dollar per week. Women and girls who cannot pay lodging, and are without a home, are allowed to remain free of charge for three days. Connected with the institution is a school of instruction for girls wishing to learn the business of skillful operators on sewing-machines. There is an average daily attendance of thirty young women. Twenty machines of the different makers are employed, and the pupils are taught by Mrs. Berry, a skillful operator. The only charge for tutelage is the small sum of ten cents, which is required as a security for the breakage of needles. During the cutting out of this charge a fine of five cents for every needle broken was exacted. Girls then received with their work, and employed out of the room and were paid for their labor, less the cost of the board. When a lady wants to hire a seamstress in search of an operator a suitable one is selected, and the young woman so hired is thenceforward—although she may have been taught in the House for months previous—free from the payment of all fees for her instruction, and has her full earnings at her own disposal. This is far better for the poor working girl than the system that prevails among many of the large sewing-machine manufactures and agencies, who receive young women for instruction, charge them from $1 to $2 for the privilege, and should they obtain employment for them, require, as in one case where a young woman earned $3 per day, $1 per day out of her wages as a discount. The doors of the "Lodging-house" are closed at 9 o'clock to all comers, though they are sometimes opened after that hour, as has been the case during the prevailing storm.

Day of Prayer for Colleges—Services at the New-York University.

Yesterday having been appointed as a day of prayer for colleges, was duly observed by the Faculty and students of the New-York University. Religious services were held at 11 A. M. in the small chapel of the University, but owing to the fierce snow-storm which raged the congregation was very slim. After prayer and reading of Scripture, Prof. Martin (Professor of Belles-lettres) preached a plain, practical sermon from the text, Revelations, third chapter and twentieth verse: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice and open the door I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with Me." The entreating attitude of the Savior was pointed out, and the reasons which prevent His admission. Sometimes the bustle outside, the cares and pleasures of the world prevent us from hearing the knock; and sometimes the hurry of business within, the plans and purposes for the morrow, the schemes for the acquisition of wealth and power, the aspirations toward fame and honor and eminent position in society—all these things and many others prevent men from hearing the Savior's knock. But the call having been heard there is another condition to be fulfilled—the door of our hearts must be opened. The Professor recited Bishop Coxe's beautiful hymn commencing "Last, the Savior knocketh, knocketh," &c., one of the most practical commentaries that could be made upon this passage. The conditions having been met, the knock heard and the door opened, the Savior enters, not as a wayfarer to rest for an hour or for a day, but to abide with us, to guide and to comfort, and to cheer and bless us. The application of the passage was made in a practical manner, and the audience was urged not to let the moments pass until they had harkened to the voice of Jesus, opened the doors of their hearts and let Him in to abide with them forever. The audience then sang the Doxology, and were dismissed with the benediction.

IRELAND AND THE IRISH.

The Present and Future of Ireland—Interesting Lecture by Rev. James Kennedy.

The causes which have injuriously affected Ireland in the past, and those which are likely to affect her beneficially in the future, were last evening the subject of a lecture by Rev. James Kennedy, in Westminster Presbyterian Church, Twenty-second-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues. The indicemicy of the evening kept a great many away, but still the audience was much larger than might be expected to turn out on such a night. Mr. Kennedy started off with a brief geographical and topographical description of Ireland, and added that an Irishman needed no pronouncing that his country is small. The extremity of Celtic earth was Cape Clear, and the extreme breadth from Dublin to Galway was 120 miles. Although there is strong presumptive evidence that the British Isles were originally peopled from Central Asia, the cradle of the human race. The common belief that St. Patrick was a Roman missionary was refuted by the historic fact that Ireland was the last European country or kingdom to embrace Popery, which was finally forced upon her by Henry II. in the twelfth century. And if St. Patrick was not a myth, he could have been none other than a Chaldean missionary, and there was hardly a doubt that the Irish received Christianity from that people; so that the assumptions of Rome are utterly groundless. He had read in his own country a description, by that able and excellent paper, the New-York Times, of the last celebration of St. Patrick's Day here, and was very much amused when the prediction was made in the Times that St. Patrick might one day become the Patron Saint of America, and that Washington and the good Saint would go hand in hand, and the Stars and Stripes should be wreathed by the Shamrock. Previous to Ireland's forced acceptance of Popery, her education and Christian piety had gained for her the worthy title of Island of Saints, and other European nations sent their children thither to be educated. But the English occupation of Ireland has been one despotism, spoliation and robbery—an evil, only evil, and an evil continually. After her subjugation to Popery, Ireland lost her piety and purity, and became the most Popish country in the world, and when Henry subsequently quarreled with the Pope, and sought to gain the spiritual allegiance of the Irish to himself, and could not, he sequestrated the ecclesiastical lands and bestowed them upon favorites, retainers and sycophants. Previous to the English occupation of the island, the Irish had held land under the old Celtic law, which recognized the peasant as a land-owner and tiller of the soil, and as long as he paid his rent and taxes, and remained loyal and true, it prohibited proprietors of estates from oppressing or dispossessing the peasants. But the English changed all this. Mr. Kennedy next reviewed the facts connected with the transplanting of the Province of Ulster by English and Scotch colonists, and the land tenancy which grew out of it, and which has produced the marked difference between that and the other Provinces of the island, and which has been commonly known as the "Ulster Peasant Right." It gave the tenant the right to remuneration for all the improvements he had made upon the land, and hence he could not be turned off his homestead at a moment's notice by a landlord or bailiff. This tenant-right system has lately been legalized by the British Parliament. The establishment of an Encumbered Estate Court, and the acts relating thereto, which were originally designed to benefit the tenant-landholders, has proved to be one of the greatest curses to Ireland. Since the commencement of the eighteenth century there have been many things operating to bring Ireland low in the estimation of other nations. There was (1) the ruin of her manufactures and Parliament, which led to absenteeism, and drained the lands of millions of money, that landlords might spend it in dissipation in the British capital. Is made landlords, also, unwilling to take any interest in the development of Ireland, so that her rich lands, copper, iron, coal and other mines remained neglected. Then (2) the failure of the linen trade, by the supercedure of the spinning-wheel and hand-loom by the spinning-jenny and power-loom. Hundreds of thrifty, neat, comfortable homes in this change produced to the necessity of hiring themselves out as farm servants and laborers. (3.) The next great cause was the potato failure in 1847. The population of Ireland, in 1841, according to the census, was 8,141,824, but in twenty years it had lost by starvation and emigration nearly half a million. In 1871 the population was 4,564,642; and, (4.) lastly, political agitation, for which England alone is to blame. She refused justice to the people in their agricultural pursuits, and the people, in retaliation, shot down her bailiffs and agents, not that the Irish are a bloodthirsty people—they are the very opposite—but that they desired to kill the spirit that tried to crush out their manhood and their life. Finding that the Irish, having been forced by Britain to accept Popery, were not willing afterward to accept the King instead of the Pope, the English set the Protestants and Catholics against each other until Orangeism and Ribbonism were the result, and fanned the smoldering and deadly strife. But England had "raised a devil which she could not lay," and it has cost her millions of dollars to put down processions which she had helped to promote. But, since the commencement of the present century there have been some things operating beneficially for Ireland. Among them may be named: (1.) Catholic Emancipation, which Americans, who have emancipated and enfranchised 4,000,000 of slaves, will understand the meaning of. Here were 6,000,000 of Irish people disfranchised because of religion, but that is, happily, now changed. (2.) The establishment of a national system of education which has enabled and still enables a larger proportion of the Irish to read and write and acquire the rudiments of education than England, with all her wealth can boast of. One generation has been thus educated, and the statistics show that but one-tenth of the whole population were unable to read and write, and in another generation this proportion will not be known at all. (3.) Free trade. Under it Irish agriculture and manufactures have prospered as they never did before, and prices have steadily improved. Cheap food has stimulated industry, and thereby increased the value of labor and given the working man a degree of independence to which he had been a stranger. (4.) Improved systems of agriculture and the establishment and ... Chief Justice Chase has declared it to be a principle of English law that the owner of the land owned everything above it, even to the bird that nestled in the trees or the rabbit that burrowed in the ground. But the Land act has changed all that, and has provided, under certain circumstances, for the tenant becoming a land-owner. For instance, four or more tenants may contrive to purchase an estate in the Encumbered Estates Court, or from a broken-down owner, and if they can raise one-third of the purchase money, the Government loans the other two-thirds at five per cent., payable in thirty-five years, after which time the estate is theirs free from all encumbrance. Now, then, political power is the lever which they have, exercised over tenants. It will put an end to secret land conspiracy, because men will have a stake in the land, and a much greater interest to be loyal than rebellious. Religious animosities will also cease. And these note are acknowledged by Gladstone, O'Hagan and Fortescue as acts of justice. And they will never go back. The Government has promised to buy up the waste lands and give them to the peasantry. Ireland has the richest mines, the finest harbors and the greatest water-power of any country of equal size in the world, and judging from these considerations, she has the prospect before her of becoming what she has been justly styled—

"First flower of the earth, and first gem of the sea."

CLASS REUNION.

Pleasant Gathering and Dinner of the Ninth Class Association of Old Public School No. 14.

The eighth reunion of the Ninth Class Association of Public School No. 14, now known as Grammar School No. 13, was celebrated at the St. James Hotel last evening. Despite the inclemency of the weather there was a very large representation of the graduates present, including members of the class of 1851, the time of the organization of the school. The company passed several enjoyable hours in disposing of a good dinner, followed by pleasant addresses and reminiscences of the old Alma Mater. The association was organized Nov. 18, 1861, and is the pioneer of several City class associations.

Mr. James A. Lucas presided at the dinner. Among the guests present were Mr. Anson Willis, the first Principal of the school; Mr. Leonard Hazeltine, the present Principal, Mr. Bernard Smith, President of the Board of Education; Mr. Isaac J. Oliver; Mr. Greatton, President of Public School Association No. 7. There were also present Messrs. J. Henry Price, Vice-President of the Association, Leonard Hazeltine, Jr., Edward F. Willis, Joseph K. Sibell, James R. Underwood, James Farren, Frederick C. Wagner, Lewis J. Kirk, W. Pierce Stymus, Isaac W. Britton, W. R. W. Chambers, George C. Fisher, Henry S. Smith, Francis Pidgeon, George H. Stout, Joseph C. Finckney, Richard R. Hunt, John Gamble, Jr., Lewis Brackman, Edward Foley, Thos. G. Cowperthwaite, Wm. H. Lockwood and Adam C. Martin.

After the removal of the cloth, letters were read from Gov. Hoffman, Mr. James W. Gerard, Judge Richards, Mr. Lambermore, and others, regretting their inability to attend. The following letter was read from the Mayor:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CITY HALL, NEW-YORK, Jan. 23, 1871.

MY DEAR STOUT: Please say to your Committee that I deeply regret that having a dinner-party engaged on the day in question, it will be utterly impossible for me to divulge myself, like the oysters that will be eaten, I suppose, at our different tables. Remember my thanks to the Secretary, Simms—whose address I have forgotten, or I would send this reply to him, according to etiquette—for his splendid circular. If all the Ninth Class learned to write as well as I did, at Public School No. 14, I have a very great admiration for the composition. In old times the Sibyl wrote blindly. The modern Sibyll writes clearly.

I am, very truly, your obliged friend and obedient servant, A. OAKEY HALL.

THE FENIAN EXILES.

The Wellingtons Still on the Lookout for the Swinging Men—Cruising in the Bay—Scenes and Incidents.

On Wednesday afternoon the Empire State steamed down the Bay to meet the Fenian exiles, carrying on board a number of restless Tammany politicians anxious to make capital of the event, a brigade numbering 150 men of the Legion of St. Patrick, and a very necessary complement of thirty-four policemen, under the command of Sergt. Mahony. On board, also, were a number of Fenian Head-centres, who had congregated for the purpose of surprising the exiles with the exhibition of the strength of their organization, which display the elements unfortunately rendered inoperative. The vessel, bearing this precious cargo of electrified patriotism and political self-seeking, steamed down the Bay about 3½ miles, when the stirring strains of "St. Patrick's Day," and the salvos of artillery from the solitary gun which mounted the deck of the "gallant craft," as a fulsome orator expressed it. Hardly had the boat cut away from its moorings when a collision with an intrusive ferry-boat became imminent, but fortunately no accident occurred, notwithstanding the terrific yell of the said gun, which startled the entire ladies' cabin of the ferry-boat, and caused much amusement to the excursionists, who sent up a wild Irish cheer, which turned the anxiety of the occupants of the ferry-boat to good humor. It needed no sagacious observation to see that on board were the elements of uproarious fun. Laughing, joking, and button-holing among the crowd were Col. Leonard, commanding the Legion of St. Patrick; Aldermen Hampson, Costello and Duffy; Dr. Dyer, Col. Doleau, Forbes Holland, Market Commissioner; Judge McGuire, Judge Connally, Congressman Roberts, Richard O'Gorman, Stephen J. Meany, Hon. Frank Duffy, Col. Cavanagh, Col. Warren, Col. Hanly, J. O'Donovan Rossa, Jr., J. Savage, Jas. J. Traynor, Wm. C. O'Brien, John O'Connor, John Mullaily, Gen. Butler, Hon. James Wilson and other political celebrities. At Quarantine Dr. Carnochan was taken on board, and a short time afterward dinner was announced. The repast was partaken of in relays, and although dinner was served at 4 it was past 8 before the last man was fortified against hunger. Mr. Richard O'Gorman, assisted by the Committee of Hennessy and Donovan Rossa Roberts, somewhat surprised the unterrified by a champagne dinner. The great bone and sinew of Democracy partook of the repast in the quietest imaginable way, and up to this point a semblance of order prevailed. The vessel, which was hired for the occasion at an expense of $1,600 per day, steamed down to Sandy Hook and remained until dark. An abundant supply of provisions, costing about $4,000, had been laid on board, and Mr. Simons, the factotum of the ubiquitous Fire, informed the anxious assemblage that if kept out for a few days they had enough on board to live as a Prince. The Captain, however, did not participate in this illarious conception of things, and said he thought the night looked so squally, he would return to Quarantine, which he accordingly did. The night on board the Empire State, filled with 600 frolicsome Irishmen, can more easily be conceived than described. No one slept, as he made a pretext of being in the arms of Morpheus, but the wild yells, vigorous speeches, boisterous songs, thumping, dancing, chair-breaking and glass-smashing, not to mention a few incipient stages of a general fight, made things sufficiently lively to keep the occupants of the state-room "uneasy." In one part of the saloon a party of juveniles played euchre the livelong night, and the ecstacy of a successful "lone hand" was enough to wake the echoes over the whole Bay. Not far from these was an assembly, half asleep, listening to the doleful dolefulness of an Irish song. Further on, was an Irish orator talking to posterity, for his quiet hearers were sound asleep.

Below, in the ladies' cabin, the Fenian Centres assembled and were addressed in the usual style of oratory, in which the intonations were marked by "British dungeons," "noble patriots," "martyrs to the cause," "Ireland forever," "Erin go Bragh," "bully for the Sixth Ward," &c. This crisis of patriotic fever only got to zero about 5 o'clock, and with the exception of an occasional yell of enthusiasm which would shake the sleepers from their peaceful quietude. About 7 o'clock the hubbub commenced again, and the "bold soldier boys" of the Legion, who thought they were out for at least two days' frolic, were much agrieved to find that the Captain had determined to return to New-York. This night's sweating about the Bay made 3½ miles have done the steamer considerable injury and the Committee determined, at least, to meet the exiles expected on the Russia, namely: John O'Leary, Thos. C. Luby, Col. Thomas Burke, Capt. McCafferty, and Dr. Powers, on the pier at Jersey City, in carriages at the head of a procession. But the exiles at Swessey's Hotel remained quiet during yesterday, but were somewhat disappointed at not seeing their fellow-exiles last evening. They object to this local reception, and would rather have received a welcome from the American people, and not from designing politicians. The following notice has been issued:

Owing to the continued severity of the storm it is impossible for the Committee of Welcome to again attempt going down the Bay to meet the steamer Russia, consequently the Committee have decided to wait until her arrival at Jersey City, when carriages will be in waiting to convey them to the hotel, where their brother exiles are staying.

Disastrous Fire in William-Street.

A fire occurred, last night, in the five-story brick building, No. 72 William-street, which caused considerable losses. The second floor is occupied by H. C. Biller, wholesale dealer in drugs, who sustained a loss of $20,000 on stock. The first floor is occupied by Joseph H. Mirsere, wholesale drugs. Loss, $30,000. The upper floors are occupied by George Jacobs & Son, manufacturing chemists. Loss, $40,000. All covered by insurance. The building, owner unknown, was damaged to the extent of $30,000; insured. The origin of the flames could not be ascertained.

The Crispin Troubles in Bloomfield, N. J.

The Crispins in the employ of Mr. George Batzer, a shoe manufacturer in Bloomfield, N. J., struck about a week ago. Being unable to agree upon terms with his old workmen, he employed others, called by the Crispins "foul" men. Some New-York Crispins also applied for and obtained employment. But their ways were dark. They acted as spies on the other workmen, and finally assaulted two of them. Mr. Batzer had imported special constables, who arrested nine of the assailants and lodged them in jail. Thus the matter rests at present.

Billiards—The Long Island Championship.

The contest for the emblem of the amateur championship of Long Island, which took place last night, at Samuels' Billiard Rooms, in Brooklyn, resulted in favor of the present champion, Mr. Kierney, who defeated Mr. Vanderbeekers by a score of 501 to 376. Kierney's average was 9, and his best run 37, Vanderbeekers's average was 7, and his best run was 27.

Wreck of the Saginaw—A Letter from One of the Officers.

The following private letter from one of the officers of the ill-fated steamer Saginaw, appears in the Chicago Tribune of the 24th:

OCMAN ISLAND, PACIFIC COAST, Nov. 14, 1870.

This is to let you know that the Saginaw has been wrecked, and that all hands are well and doing well. The ship struck on the reef surrounding this island, on Saturday morning, Oct. 29, at about 8:30. We saved ourselves a little food, a condenser, and three good and one damaged boat. The condenser proves to be a very valuable article, as we have been unable to find fresh water. We have little food and no medicines. Since our landing we have existed mostly on seals, turtles, fish and "gooneys," (a species of albatross.) We have two meals a day, from half to three-quarter rations. We have been at work most of the time in putting our rig ready for sea. It is about ready, and will probably sail in charge of Lieut. Talbot on Wednesday, the 16th. We all hope she will make the trip successfully, and inside of thirty days, in which case we will be homeward-bound before you receive this. Should she not make the trip, we will probably be in San Francisco before you receive this, so that, when you do, you may assure yourself that we are safe and secure. We left Honolulu on Oct. 1; arrived at the Midway islands on the 12th, and had quite a pleasant passage, with a little squally weather. At the Midways we had very heavy work for about fifteen days. We were preparing things for an absence of some time. A contracting party has been at work there, trying to open a channel through the reefs for the China mail steamer. Their time was up on the 27th of October. On the 28th, at 4 P. M., we started for here, hoping to make the island at a little after daylight the next morning. We made it, surely. We came to see if anybody was wrecked, and were wrecked ourselves. When the rig leaves we will commence to build a larger boat. After we finish wrecking and get started on this, life will be very dull, and we will have nothing to do but eat (?), sleep and build air-castles about home, when we get there.

PERRY GARST,
Ensign, United States Navy.

A Western Claude Duval—Remarkable Career of a Young Thief.

From the Kansas City Bulletin, Jan. 21.

There arrived at the Union Depot, yesterday morning, from Cheyenne, securely ironed and under care of a United States detective, named T. S. Glendye, of Cincinnati, one of the most daring boy impostors ever caught by the authorities. His name is said to be Dennis Mahoney, and he is the youngest son of a mechanic living in Columbus, Ohio. At an early age the boy developed a vicious disposition, and was detected in an attempt to rob the United States mail-car on the Pan-Handle Road. For this offense he was sent to the House of Refuge.

Finding the accommodations of this establishment unsuitable to his fastidious tastes, by the much earnest protestations of piety and reform he was allowed to return to his parents at Columbus. Here he again developed his vicious instincts by beating his mother, setting fire to the house and running away. The next heard of him he is chisled as a burglar in a cavalry regiment, en route to the Rocky Mountains. Here he proved himself such an incorrigible young thief, that after one year's service in the guard-house he was drummed out of the army at Fort Laramie. He was soon afterward taken, disguised as an Indian, in an attack upon a supply train, together with another military renegade, who was forthwith hung to a tree. Harrison was spared on account of his youth, and taken to Fort Halleck, whence he soon afterward escaped.

He became acquainted in Denver with a desperate gang of stage robbers, and took part in their attacks upon the overland mails and stages. He soon afterward left the West, and returned home to Ohio, and joined the Methodist Church. He became acquainted with a young country girl and married her, but deserted her soon after. He became a brakeman upon the Central Ohio Railroad, but was discharged for laziness. He was married again in Zanesville, and was arrested in Newark for seduction, but managed to escape the deluded victim with some $900 in money. He came to Kansas City in the Winter of 1867, and assuming the character of a wayward son of a wealthy banker East, made his way into good society. Took up and married a Wyandotte. Being good-looking and free with money, he "took well," and became engaged to two of Kansas City's fair daughters. He remained here a brief per od, and left the city and a respectable family in Wyandotte cursing him and his deception. His next scene of rascality was at a counterfeit den in 12 Houston-street, New-York. Here he became acquainted with the thieves, gamblers and counterfeiters, and being naturally smart and intelligent, soon became a leader of his fellow-criminals. He established a saloon, which became the head-quarters of all the counterfeiters and "knowers of the queer" in the country, and in due time became an expert in the business. When the counterfeit $50 Treasury notes first made their appearance, he "shoved" seventeen of them in one day, purchasing a sufficient amount of clothing to supply himself and mistress for days by the change. Shortly after this he became one of the leaders of one of the worst gangs of counterfeiters in the United States, and was connected with the stealing of certain plates from the United States Treasury Office. In 1868 the gang to which he belonged went into the fractional currency business, and to them the country is indebted for the innumerable fifty and twenty-five cent notes with which every community, both East and West, were flooded, and it was while in this business that he was detected. In November, 1869, his gang had agents in all parts of the country, to whom they sent their worthless currency for circulation. His boldness getting the better of his discretion, he was detected and arrested by Col. Wood, Chief Detective of the Treasury Department, escaped from a train from the New-York and Albany Railroad, and made the best of his time and started West. He has made some successful hauls, and scattered "the queer" in Omaha and St. Joseph, and was traced up and arrested a few days ago upon a train between Cheyenne and Denver.

Boston Trotting-Horses Sent to New-York.

From the Boston Post, Jan. 26.

J. E. Maynard, the well-known dealer and breeder of trotting-horses, recently sold and yesterday shipped to New-York several first-class trotters, where they will be heard from, should the sleighing now being enjoyed by its citizens be vouchsafed to them yet a while longer. At the head of the list is the brown gelding Young Dexter, who, by his performances on the road this Winter, has shown that he was worthy of the name, and that he is one of the best pole-horses in the country. He was sold to J. D. Walton for $6,000. Lady Alice, a beautiful animal, who won the first premium for gentlemen's driving-horses to a road-wagon at the New-England Fair, at Manchester, last Fall, against a dozen competitors, was sold to Dan Mace for $3,500, and the night she passed in quarantine quietude. About 7 o'clock the hubbub commenced again, and the "bold soldier boys" of the Legion, who thought they were out for at least two days' frolic, were much agrieved to find that the Captain had determined to return to New-York. This night's sweating about the Bay made 3½ miles have done the steamer considerable injury and the Committee determined, at least, to meet the exiles expected on the Russia, namely: John O'Leary, Thos. C. Luby, Col. Thomas Burke, Capt. McCafferty, and Dr. Powers, on the pier at Jersey City, in carriages at the head of a procession. But the exiles at Swessey's Hotel remained quiet during yesterday, but were somewhat disappointed at not seeing their fellow-exiles last evening. They object to this local reception, and would rather have received a welcome from the American people, and not from designing politicians. The following notice has been issued:

Owing to the continued severity of the storm it is impossible for the Committee of Welcome to again attempt going down the Bay to meet the steamer Russia, consequently the Committee have decided to wait until her arrival at Jersey City, when carriages will be in waiting to convey them to the hotel, where their brother exiles are staying.

Disastrous Fire in William-Street.

A fire occurred, last night, in the five-story brick building, No. 72 William-street, which caused considerable losses. The second floor is occupied by H. C. Biller, wholesale dealer in drugs, who sustained a loss of $20,000 on stock. The first floor is occupied by Joseph H. Mirsere, wholesale drugs. Loss, $30,000. The upper floors are occupied by George Jacobs & Son, manufacturing chemists. Loss, $40,000. All covered by insurance. The building, owner unknown, was damaged to the extent of $30,000; insured. The origin of the flames could not be ascertained.

The Crispin Troubles in Bloomfield, N. J.

The Crispins in the employ of Mr. George Batzer, a shoe manufacturer in Bloomfield, N. J., struck about a week ago. Being unable to agree upon terms with his old workmen, he employed others, called by the Crispins "foul" men. Some New-York Crispins also applied for and obtained employment. But their ways were dark. They acted as spies on the other workmen, and finally assaulted two of them. Mr. Batzer had imported special constables, who arrested nine of the assailants and lodged them in jail. Thus the matter rests at present.

Billiards—The Long Island Championship.

The contest for the emblem of the amateur championship of Long Island, which took place last night, at Samuels' Billiard Rooms, in Brooklyn, resulted in favor of the present champion, Mr. Kierney, who defeated Mr. Vanderbeekers by a score of 501 to 376. Kierney's average was 9, and his best run 37, Vanderbeekers's average was 7, and his best run was 27.

Wreck of the Saginaw—A Letter from One of the Officers.

The following private letter from one of the officers of the ill-fated steamer Saginaw, appears in the Chicago Tribune of the 24th:

OCMAN ISLAND, PACIFIC COAST, Nov. 14, 1870.

This is to let you know that the Saginaw has been wrecked, and that all hands are well and doing well. The ship struck on the reef surrounding this island, on Saturday morning, Oct. 29, at about 8:30. We saved ourselves a little food, a condenser, and three good and one damaged boat. The condenser proves to be a very valuable article, as we have been unable to find fresh water. We have little food and no medicines. Since our landing we have existed mostly on seals, turtles, fish and "gooneys," (a species of albatross.) We have two meals a day, from half to three-quarter rations. We have been at work most of the time in putting our rig ready for sea. It is about ready, and will probably sail in charge of Lieut. Talbot on Wednesday, the 16th. We all hope she will make the trip successfully, and inside of thirty days, in which case we will be homeward-bound before you receive this. Should she not make the trip, we will probably be in San Francisco before you receive this, so that, when you do, you may assure yourself that we are safe and secure. We left Honolulu on Oct. 1; arrived at the Midway islands on the 12th, and had quite a pleasant passage, with a little squally weather. At the Midways we had very heavy work for about fifteen days. We were preparing things for an absence of some time. A contracting party has been at work there, trying to open a channel through the reefs for the China mail steamer. Their time was up on the 27th of October. On the 28th, at 4 P. M., we started for here, hoping to make the island at a little after daylight the next morning. We made it, surely. We came to see if anybody was wrecked, and were wrecked ourselves. When the rig leaves we will commence to build a larger boat. After we finish wrecking and get started on this, life will be very dull, and we will have nothing to do but eat (?), sleep and build air-castles about home, when we get there.

A Western Claude Duval—Remarkable Career of a Young Thief.

From the Kansas City Bulletin, Jan. 21.

There arrived at the Union Depot, yesterday morning, from Cheyenne, securely ironed and under care of a United States detective, named T. S. Glendye, of Cincinnati, one of the most daring boy impostors ever caught by the authorities. His name is said to be Dennis Mahoney, and he is the youngest son of a mechanic living in Columbus, Ohio. At an early age the boy developed a vicious disposition, and was detected in an attempt to rob the United States mail-car on the Pan-Handle Road. For this offense he was sent to the House of Refuge.

Finding the accommodations of this establishment unsuitable to his fastidious tastes, by the much earnest protestations of piety and reformation that he was allowed to return to his parents at Columbus. Here he again developed his vicious instincts by beating his mother, setting fire to the house and running away. The next heard of him he is chisled as a burglar in a cavalry regiment, en route to the Rocky Mountains. Here he proved himself such an incorrigible young thief, that after one year's service in the guard-house he was drummed out of the army at Fort Laramie. He was soon afterward taken, disguised as an Indian, in an attack upon a supply train, together with another military renegade, who was forthwith hung to a tree. Harrison was spared on account of his youth, and taken to Fort Halleck, whence he soon afterward escaped.

He became acquainted in Denver with a desperate gang of stage robbers, and took part in their attacks upon the overland mails and stages.
